Metz, métz (Fr pron méz and Metz or Metz) a city of Lorraine capital of the district of Lorraine part up to 1871 the capital of the French department of Moselle, at the confluence of the Moselle and Meuse 90 miles NW of Strasbourg and 170 miles E of Paris The old part, which has narrow streets and quaint houses lies in sloping ground between the Meuse and the Moselle while the newer portion is built in a plain and is flanked by the arms of the Meuse There are several fine open places and a handsome esplanade adorned with statues of Marshal Ney and Emperor Wilhelm I and with a beautiful fountain The cathedral of St. Stephen a magnificent cruciform pile, built on the highest ground of the city and containing fine paintings was begun in the thirteenth century and finished in the sixteenth century In 1871 and 1918 complete restoration Among the other edifices of interest are the garrison church the church of St. Vincent the church of St. Genes the court house, the town hall the municipal museum and the railway station The educational institutions of Metz include schools of music and art and an artillery school The municipal library contains over 80,000 volumes and some manuscripts dating from the early part of the Middle Ages The industries comprise the manufacture of leather shoes hats and artificial flowers etc Metz is one of the strongest fortresses in the world its defenses having been originally constructed by the French and enlarged by the Germans A dozen fort encircle the city Pop in 1900 58,424 Metz was an important military station of the Romans Under the Franks it was the capital of Austrasia. After the disruption of the great Frankish realm it was included in the kingdom of Germany and from the beginning of the thirteenth century was a free imperial city It was at Metz that the Emperor Charles V. issued the famous Golden Bull in 1350 In 1552 the town was occupied by Henry II of France, whom general Francis of Valois immediately followed successfully with a siege by the Emperor Charles V. From that time to 1871 Metz belonged to France. On Oct 27 1870 after a siege of two months, the French general Bazaine surrendered here with a vast army to the Germans Already in Roman times Metz was the seat of a bishop The bishops belonged, not to the ecclesiastical princes of the Holy Roman (German) Empire, ruling over a considerable district. In 1552 their see was seized by Henry II of France.

Mexico (Sp. Méjico méh ne-ko) a republic in the southern part of North America, lying between lat. 14° 30' and 33° 40' N. and between the meridians of longitude of 86° 45' (northern Yucatan) and 117° 5' W. Area (inclusive of the small outlying islands) 767 050 sq. m. Where not confined by the sea, it is bounded on the N.E. by Guatemala (from which it is partly separated by the Suchiate and Usumacinta rivers) and British Honduras, and on the N. by the United States. The Rio Grande forms the boundary with Texas. The boundary with the United States has a length of 1833 miles of which 1174 are constituted by the Rio Grande. The general contour of the country is very irregular the land extending southward between the Gulf of Mexico and the Pacific Ocean as a peninsular extension of the United States and rapidly narrowing in that direction. In the extreme S.E. the peninsula of Yucatan projects northward between the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Mexico. On the isthmus of Tehuantepec the distance separating the Gulf of Mexico from the Pacific Ocean is hardly 130 miles. The greatest breadth is between the most eastern and western parts on the United States boundary where the distance from the Gulf thence to the Pacific is not far from 1500 miles. The peninsula of Lower (Baja) California extends into the Pacific about 700 miles, and is separated from the main land by the Gulf of California.

Relief of the Land.—Mexico is pre-eminently a region of mountain elevations consisting in the main of a vast central plateau or table-land, of bounding or flanking ridges to this plateau (Sierra Madre Oriental and Sierra Madre Occidental with the Sierra Pacifica, as they and their ramifications are vaguely designated) of mountains of inferior height rising above the plateau and of the low lands (tierras calientes,—i.e. hot lands) which lie at the foot of the plateau-borders and make up the rich coastal strips on both the Atlantic and Pacific sides. The plateau which is a southward continuation of the elevated regions of the southwestern United States, attains its greatest altitude (8000-9000 feet) S. and E.W. of the city of Mexico (7400 ft.). It is constructed largely of volcanic and sedimentary sands and ashes, which have filled up ancient mountain valleys to the brim and thereby masked the nuclear orographic relief,—the internal mountain ridges many of which rise in crests, knobs, and islands far above the true plateau-surface. Just what relation the Mexican Cordilleras bear to the main mountain systems of the western United States has not been absolutely determined but it seems probable that the Rocky Mountains proper have no direct continuation in Mexico. The Sierra Nevada, on the other hand can almost positively be assumed to be continued in the axial chain of Lower California, whose elevations in the south reach 8000-10,000 ft. The highest summit of Mexico not of a volcanic character appears to be Compositelap, in the state of Oaxaca, about 10 000 ft. which marks the divergence of the mountain systems whose determining lines were formed in Central America.

Volcanoes.—The more distinctive mountain forms of Mexico are the volcanoes, of which there are hundreds scattered over the plateau and at various points of the southern lowlands. Many of these have only recently become extinct, others are semi-active or dormant. The more prominent ones are the Peak of Orizaba, or the Citlaltepetl (Star Mountain) the culminating point of the republic, about 18 250 feet in elevation Popocatepetl (Smoky Mountain), 17,500 ft. Ixtaccihuatl (White Woman) 18 950 (17 200?) ft. Nevado de Toluca, about 14,950 ft. Malinche 13 460 ft. Cofre de Perote, or Neuhéurapatpetl, 13,400 ft. Nevado de Colima, 14,100 ft. Volcán de Colima, 12,750 ft. now active for a period of about 10 years. Tancitaro 12,550 ft. Texila Jorullo (famed for its great eruption in 1759) 4300 ft. and Ceboruco, also active. Most of these are situated near the southern border of the plateau or on the low land immediately S. of it. The three summits first named are covered with perpetual snow; Ixtaccihuatl alone has glaciers of any extent (Porfirio Diaz Glacier). The snow line is found at about 14,500-15 000 ft. 1000-1500 ft. above the timber-line.

Coast-Lines, Rivers etc.—The opposite shores of Mexico differ widely in physical conformation. The great current of the Atlantic Ocean sweeps around the peninsula of Yucatan and through the Gulf of Mexico causing sand banks and barring of the river mouths. On the whole coast of the Gulf of Mexico there is no bay of any importance, no good natural harbor easy of access, and but little well-sheltered anchorage. Between Yucatan and Tabasco lies the Laguna de Términos 45 miles long and 30 miles wide, connected with the sea by two channels, the deepest having but two fathoms. Farther W. on the coast of Tabasco, the Laguna de Santa Ana, though deep within is quite inaccessible to shipping. Similar remarks apply to the lagoons of Madero (or Alvarado) Tamiagua, and Tampico. Beyond the last-named place N. extends a long succession of sand-banks, fringing the shore, and exhibiting in its earlier stages, the process of forming lagoons. Here, on the coast of Tamaulipas, we find the lagoons Miralles, Madre, Santander, and a few others all difficult of approach and rapidly filling up with mud. On the W. coast of Mexico, from Acapulco, in lat. 16° 40' N. the harbor of which is landlocked, deep and capacious, to Guaymas far up the Gulf of California, extends a series of fine harbors, capable of sheltering the largest vessels. In lat. 21° 33' N. at the mouth of the Rio Grande de Santiago is the noble harbor of San Blas and in lat. 23° 15' N. is the harbor of Mazatlán. This is difficult of access and inferior to most respects to the harbor of Guaymas in lat. 27° 50' N. The E. shore of the California peninsula offers many bays and small havens. Its W. side towards the ocean is less indented.

Mexico is in general sparingly watered and labors under the almost total want of navigable rivers reaching the interior. The streams, descending from the elevated interior to the sea assume the character of rapid torrents, dry at one season and overflowing at another. The longest and greatest of the Mexican rivers is the Rio Grande del Norte, called also Rio Bravo del Norte, which as has already been seen, forms the greater part of the boundary between Mexico and the United States, and the waters of which belong to both countries. The Rio de Tampico, formed by the junction of the Pánuco with the Teja or Monteruma, flows NE. to the Gulf of Mexico and at its mouth is the port of Tampico. Total course about 200 miles. The San Juan rises in the metalliferous mountains of Oaxaca, forms the great lagoons of Tequapa and Embaradero, and reaches the sea through the Laguna del Madero. The Coahuacoles issue from the mountains of Tarifa, lat. 17° N. forms part of the boundary between the states of Oaxaca and Vera Cruz, and winding round to the N. and E. falls into the Gulf of Mexico in lat. 16° 8' N. This river has attracted much attention, because it has been supposed that the communication between the Mexican Gulf and the Pacific might be effected by joining the Coahuacoles and the Chetopa or Chimalapa, which latter rises close to the sources of the former and falls into the Gulf of Tehuantepec. Extensive harbor works are now being constructed at the mouth of the Coahuacoles which will materially aid in the service of transportation across the isthmus, in connection with the railway traversing that region. E. of the Coahuacoles are the Grifolva and Usumacinta rivers. The rivers flowing into the Pacific Ocean are, towards the S. all rapid, and important only as they water coasts more or less populous. The Rio de las Balas or Zacatula, descends from the state of Mexico, and, after collecting several large streams, reaches the ocean with a broad and deep channel, navigable for boats a good way up and forms at its mouth the little harbor of Zacatula. About the middle of the Pacific coast is the Rio Grande de Santiago, or Rio Teotitlán (also known in its upper course as Rio Lerma) discharging the waters of Lake Chapala, the second in magnitude of the Mexican rivers.

The lakes of Mexico are numerous but unimportant. The largest is Chapala, mostly in Jalisco covering an area of some 1500 sq. m. Other lakes are Cutzaco and Patzcuaro, both in the state of Michoacán the Laguna de Pánuco in the state of Coahuila, and the lakes of the valley of the city of Mexico,—Chalco Xochimilco, Texcoco San Cristóbal Xalisco and Zumpango, the overflows from which formerly at various times penetrated into the capital but which have recently been connected with a vast system of drainage canals and tunnels.

Climate.—Mexico has great diversities of climate within a relatively narrow compass. The Mexicans divide their country with respect to climate, into tierras calientes (hot lands) which extend from the sea to about 3000 feet above tion; terres templadas (temperate), ranging between 3000 and 5000-7000 ft.; and terres frías (cold) above 7000 ft. The coasts are hot, humid and in many parts unhealthy. The more elevated tracts of the middle zone are usually healthy and enjoy an agreeable temperature. The same is true of the great plateau, where however, owing to the rarefaction of the atmosphere, many persons are never acclimated. The principal high plains in the vicinity of the city of Mexico are the valleys of Toluca, 6600 ft. of Tenochtitlán 7400 ft. of Actopan 6450 ft. and of Ixtla, 3200 ft. above sea-level. The maximum temperature recorded at Mérida (Yucatan) Mamitlán, and Colima is 100°. On the central plateau the summer heat rarely rises above 88°-90° in winter the temperature only exceptionally falls much below the freezing point. Snow although in small quantity is not absolutely infrequent in the city of Mexico. The rainfall over a considerable part of the plateau does not exceed 25 inches at Montecrey it has risen as high as 130 inches. Earthquakes are of frequent occurrence, particularly in Oaxaca and near the capital but they are generally slight and do little damage. One of the most violent and destructive recorded was that of Jan 1902, when the town of Chilpancingo in Guerrero, was in great part destroyed.

Vegetable Products.—Mexico possesses a variety and abundance of vegetable products hardly equalled in any other portion of the earth. The forests near the coast display the grandest forms of tropical vegetation among which may be enumerated a vast variety of palms and acacias, the giant wild fig (or rubber) tree, the rosewood, mahogany, Brazil wood, Champacho-wood, ebony yellow and iron wood, intermingled with elegant giant ferns and a wealth of orchidaceous plants. A zone of 4,000-6000 feet elevation is largely that of evergreen oaks and mistletoe to which succeeds the region of the temperate flora, with pines, firs, and spruces, which form magnificent forests at elevations of 9000-10,000 ft. and continue to the timber line at about 12,500 ft. Mexico is pre-eminently the home of the cactus, which occurs in an almost endless variety of forms from the night-blooming cereus in the lower tierra caliente to the giant organ-cactus of the mountain-slopes of 6000 ft. elevation. Among the favorite fruits of Mexico are the mango, sapote, anone, pomegranate, papaw, orange, pineapple, coconut, and banana. The special products of cultivation are the sugar-cane, coffee, cacao, vanilla, all in the region comprised between the seashore and elevations of 3000-4000 ft.—and agave, or American aloes, the last named in Yucatan cultivated for its fibre (Sisal hemp) and in major Mexico (plateau) for its milk which is fermented into the beverage known as pulque. Corn is very extensively grown on the plateau, and the cultivation of wheat has assumed large proportions. The chief agricultural crops in 1900 were stated in kilograms (the kilogramme = 2.2 pounds): wheat, 338,263,002 pure sugar 76,950,788 molasses, 52,827,473, maize, 32,492,489 rice, 26,777,917 henequen (Sisal fibre) 87,013,966, cotton 21,795,896 coffee, 21,088,123 cacao 1,973,252 and tobacco, 9,243,631.

Animal Life.—The fauna of Mexico is extremely varied comprising both temperate and tropical forms and stands geographically between the faunas of North and South America. Its mammalian forms include the jaguar puma, bear wolf tapir deer antelope sloth armadillo, possum and numerous monkeys. Birds of fine plumage are very abundant (parrots, toucans, trogons, chachalates, jays, humming-birds) as are also serpents (boa, anaconda, rattlesnake) and saurians (lizards, alligator, crocodile).

Minerals.—The mineral wealth of Mexico is prodigious and its silver and gold mines have been worked with varying degrees of energy although with much interruption almost from the days of the Spanish conquest. The other minerals include copper lead, iron, quicksilver tin cobalt, antimony and sulphur (vast deposits of the last named being found more particularly in the state of Popocatepetl). The total value of the ore output in the year 1902 was upward of $103,700,000 (Mexican money the Mexican silver peso, or dollar being equal to about 40 cents United States money). The quantity of silver obtained from the mines in 1902 was valued at $58,700,000 (Mexican) of gold, $14,352,106, of copper $24,381,289. Among the more famous mining districts are those of Guanajuato, Zacatecas, and Choloro, to which must be added the extraordinarily rich region of Parral in Chihuahua. A fairly extensive industry is carried on in opals (Querétaro) and in the exceedingly beautiful steatite marble known as Mexican onyx (state of Puebla).

Manufactures.—The leading manufactures of Mexico are those of distilled liquor, sugar rum and molasses, cotton and other textile fabrics, pottery, hats, boots and shoes, saddlery, jewelry, and tobacco. There were in 1901 2211 distilleries and 721 tobacco-factories. The product of the latter was upward of 350,000,000 cases of cigarettes, besides 130,000,000 cigars and cheroots and 4,000,000 kilograms of tobacco. The cotton manufacture is rapidly becoming an important industry. In 1902 there were 185 cotton-spinning and weaving-mills, which consumed nearly 60,000,000 pounds of raw cotton.

Population, Government, etc.—The population of Mexico comprises persons of white descent, Indians, and mestizos or people of mixed race. In parts of the coast-country there is some admixture of African blood. The Spanish language is everywhere prevalent, but many of the Indians retain the use of the ancient languages. The great bulk of the people are of the Roman Catholic faith, but all religions are tolerated and there is no state church. Among the Indians there are some pagan tribes. Before the advent of the Spaniards some tribes, commonly designated Aztecs (with whom most ethnologists to-day unite the Toltecs) who spoke the Nahuatl language and the Mayas, of Yucatan had attained to a high degree of civilisation. They were good smiths and masons, and had made some advance in the arts of design: they raised great edifices (palaces, temples, pyramids) and constructed vast works (roads, aqueducts, bridges, etc.) they had an accurate calendar and, finally, they had a system of picture writing. Monuments remain attesting their boldness of design and progress in the arts of construction. There are extensive remains of the city of Tenochtitlán near the modern Mexico with its dikes, aqueducts, and extraordinary pieces of sculpture. Oaxaca is rich in ancient remains, among which the chief are the palace and pyramid of the Zapotecas at Mitla. Another pyramid, or teocalli, is to be seen near Cholula. Near Villahermosa, in Yucatan are the remarkable ruins known as Los Roldados. In Vera Cruz are the pyramids of Papantla built of colored masses of porphyry. The extensive ruins of Palenque and Toniná in Chiapas are well known but they are equalled or surpassed by those of Uxmal and Chichenitza, in Yucatan where also are found the remains of hundreds of villages and temple (?) sites (Isamal, Lahuata, etc.).

Mexico is a federal republic, framed largely upon the model of that of the United States. Its chief executive is a president, who is elected for a term of six years (the term was four years previous to 1904) by electors chosen by the people. His is assisted by a council and a cabinet of seven members. The departments are foreign affairs, interior, justice and public instruction, justice (colonisation and industry), communications and public works, finance and public credit, and war and marine. The legislative branch of the government is vested in a congress consisting of a House of Representatives and a Senate. In the latter each state is represented by 2 members. The representatives and senators are chosen by indirect election for terms of 3 years and 4 years respectively. Each state elects its governor and has its own legislature. The names and population of the states (1906), together with their capitals, are here appended.

* Now divided into northern and southern territorial districts. The territory of Quintana Roo was organized in 1902.

The population of the republic in 1909 was 13,504,922, of which number about 32 per cent were Indians and less than 20 per cent pure whites. There are numerous normal, professional, and technical schools, supported by the federal government or the individual states.

Commerce.—The foreign trade of Mexico has exhibited a rapid growth in recent years. The value of the exports in the year 1902-3 was about $97,000,000 (reckoned in gold dollars) and that of the imports about $76,000,000. The precious metals constitute on an average about half of the total exports. Among the other leading exports are copper, lead, Simi fibre, coffee, tobacco, wool, and various vegetable products, animals, and animal products. Nearly three-fourths of the exports in the year 1902-3 went to the United States, which contributed about one-half of the imports. Of the European nations the English trade most largely with Mexico. There are more than 9,000 miles of railroad in operation. The cities are supplied with tramways.

History.—Yucatan was visited by Cortés and Pizarro in 1508 and major Mexico was discovered in 1515 by Francisco Hernández de Córdoba who sailed westward along the coast from Cape Catoch. In 1519 Cortés having conceived the project of conquering Mexico, landed where the Cruz now stands and ascended the table-land, the inhabitants of which the Aztecs, he found united under a sovereign called Montezuma. After two years of warfare Cortés succeeded in overthrowing the power of the Aztecs and the smaller states were subjected to the Spaniards almost without a struggle. Cortés having firmly established his authority in the country, a considerable number of persons emigrated from Spain to Mexico, and then acquired great wealth in mining, as merchants, and as officers of government. In 1520 Antonio de Mendoza was appointed first viceroy of Mexico or, as the region was officially called, New Spain. The viceroyalty of New Spain came to include a vast territory to the N. of the present Mexico. The viceroy continued a Spanish possession for nearly three centuries. The first revolutionary rising took place in 1810 and was chiefly fomented by the clergy under the leadership of Miguel who was executed in 1811. The struggle was continued by Morelos, who met a similar fate in 1815. The patriots soon found a brave leader in Guerrero. In 1821 the royalist commander Iturbide united with Guerrero in the so-called 22 of September, by which Mexico was constituted an independent monarchy under a prince of the royal house of Spain. Nothing came of this scheme and the independence of Mexico was declared in 1821. In 1821 it was proclaimed emperor of Mexico and interested in the opportunity that he resigned in 1823. The experiment of monarchy having failed, the plan was now tried of a federal republic, framed in many particulars upon that of the United States, and a constitution was proclaimed in 1824. The first president was Guadalupe Victoria. From 1828 the country was distracted by an endless succession of revolutions and civil wars. In 1835 there was a revolution in Texas against Mexican authority and in 1836 its people achieved their independence. A dispute regarding the boundary of Texas led in 1845 during the presidency of Santa Anna, to a war between Mexico and the United States. In 1848 General Scott entered the city of Mexico. By the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo concluded in 1848, Mexico ceded to the United States the present Arizona and New Mexico, all of Utah and Nevada and part of Colorado and Wyoming, and Upper California. In 1854 the United States purchased from Mexico a large strip of territory the Gadsden Purchase included in the present Arizona and New Mexico. In 1858-61 a French army invaded Mexico and occupied the capital. Under the auspices of Napoleon III an imperial government was inaugurated with Maximilian of Austria, brother of the emperor Francis Joseph, at its head. The republicans gathered under the banner of the noble Juárez an Indian by blood. Maximilian was emperor from 1864 until 1867, when he was shot and the republic was again proclaimed with Juárez as president. The remarkable recent development of Mexico as a nation is chiefly the history of the administration of Porfirio Díaz who has been at the head of the government since the election of 1876 with the exception of the period from 1890 to 1894.

Mexico, a state of the republic of Mexico having 5,000,000 inhabitants and 11,000,000 inhabitants. The states of Michoacán, Querétaro, Hidalgo, Tlaxcala, and Puebla, nearly enclosing the federal district of Mexico, Area 88,000 sq. m. Pop. in 1900 934,483. The major portion which is productive and well cultivated is comprised within the great central plateau and it contains part of the lofty summits of Popocatepetl and Ixtaccihuatl and the Nevado de Tolosa. It is watered by the Balsas and Lerma rivers. Silver and other metals are found. Capital, Tolosa.

Mexico, the capital of the Mexican republic, the finest and most imposing city of Latin America, and one of the most attractive cities of the Western Hemisphere, forms part of the Federal District, and is situated on the plain of Anahuac, at an elevation of about 7,350 feet. Lat. 19° 26' N. lon. 99° 8' W. It is the emerging point of several trunk-lines of railways and is 26 miles by rail almost due W. of Vera Cruz and 112 miles N.W. of El Paso, Tex. Its lofty position in a tropical region insures to it a climate of marked equality and no very really pleasant to those who are not affected by the rarity of the atmosphere. The average annual temperature is about 58° and of mid-winter 55°. The extreme heat of summer is never excessive, while in winter the thermometer almost exceptionally marks below 40—42. Light falls of snow occasionally take place. The average annual precipitation is about 20 inches.

For centuries of the world occupies a strategic location than Mexico with its high central plateau of the great snow-capped Popocatepetl and Ixtaccihuatl in the N. and the rugged Ajusco Mountains to the S. At the foot of the Spanish conquest the city (then known as Tenochtitlan) occupied part of a lake in the extensive granular part of the modern lakes Texcoco and Ximilco and was surrounded by canals. The present city is a continuation of the lake-waters has long since disappeared. The city of its present character and plan is the result of several times of intervention between the Aztec and Spanish. The first of the Aztec Texcoco. The completion in 1498 of the great drainage canal one of the most remarkable in the engineering works by which the city was freed of the threatening lagoons of the vicinity (Texcoco, Chalco, Ximilco, San Cristóbal, Xaltocan, and Ximilco) are discharged into the Gulf of Mexico by artificially freed the city from all danger of back water which at several times in the past had proved so destructive to both life and property and has vastly improved its healthfulness by providing an outlet for its sewage.

The focus of the city is the Plaza Mayor (or Plaza de Armas) the great square on whose sides are the Spanish Renaissance cathedral one of the largest and most sumptuous ecclesiastical structures of America, begun in 1533 and measuring 496 feet in length, the masterpiece of the National Cathedral, 577 ft. in length, and the Alameda Municipal (city hall). The cathedral with its choir and altar piece and choir of more by gift of the city of the Aztecs. A portion of the Plaza Mayor is occupied by the National Museum. The buildings of the city in the main of the city are of the Aztec and Spanish architecture. A marked contrast is exhibited by the heavy and mean houses of the old quarters and the modern almost palatial edifices of the newer section where the stores and store-fronts partake of the architectural form of the similar structures of the European capitals. The principal arteries of traffic are the Via (or Calle) San Francisco continued by the Calle de la Terma, and the Calle (or Calle) de Mayo. Leading out from the attractive park and promenade known as the Alameda the gathering place of the fashion and aristocracy of the capital is the Jardín de Reforma a magnificent boulevard and somewhat over 2 miles in length richly decorated with sculptural groups (the 13 of the 13th century, the 14th, and the 15th) and continuing to the hill palace and military school of Chapultepec. Among the city's more notable public buildings and institutions are the national museum with an extensive private collection of Aztec antiquities, the national picture-gallery and a library of San Carlos national library (with upwards of 100,000 volumes) school of arts, and school of medicine and engineering. Theater: the magnificent new national theatre and the Monte de Piedad (a national pawn shop). Mexico is the seat of numerous scientific and literary societies. It gained to the New World the first newspaper, the El Mercurio, in 1763. The first public school and the first railway of the city. The manufactures of the city are still not very important, although they comprise a fairly wide range of articles—cottons, linens, silk, paper, pottery, gold and silver wares, hats, leather, feather work, carriages, brick and tile, etc. Among the better known resorts and suburbs of the immediate vicinity many of these readily reached by an admirable system of electric and other tramways, are Tacubaya, San Ángel, Chapultepec, Guadalupe, and Santa Anita (on the Vera Cruz Canal). Pop. in 1900 344,721.

Mexico, mé-fo, a large indentation on the E coast of N with America washing the shores of Mexico and the United States measuring about 1100 miles from E to W and 800 miles in greatest width from N to S. It is partly formed by the peninsula of Florida and Yucatan nearly in a line between which lies the island of Cuba leaving a communication on its N with the Atlantic through the Florida Straits or Channel and on its S with the Caribbean Sea through the Channel of Yucatan. It receives a number of important rivers the principal of which are the Mississippi the Rio Grande Colorado of Texas, Brazos Sabina Nueces, and Apalachicola. The gulf excepting in the shallows which to the 200 fathom line contains the coasts of Florida, Yucatan and Louisiana far into the area of the basin is free from banks and contains only a few small rocky islands on the coast of Yucatan with the Florida Reef near its E extremity. The shores are low and generally lined with flat sandy and coral islands—not far from the land—and numerous lagoons. There are few really good harbors the most important harbor (except being those of Vera Cruz, Tampico, Pensacola Mobile Galveston, Tampico, Vera Cruz, Coahuila and Havana and the rivers which fall into the gulf are obstructed by bars at their mouths, which render them all except the Mississippi nearly inaccessible for vessels of large draught. A current of water entering the gulf from the Caribbean Sea is soon divided into two portions the one running E along the coast of Cuba, the other W in a curved line through the midlle of the gulf and around towards the Florida Channel where it meets the other current, and the two united form the Gulf Stream. (See GULF STREAM) The greatest depth is about 12,500 fathoms. The deeper ocean plain or floor of the gulf has been designated Sigsbee Deep.

Michigan, mish-ā-gā-mā, one of the north-central states of the American Union, consisting of two detached peninsulas of which the northern (the Upper Peninsula) has Lake Superior on the N. Whitefish (or Toquamenon) Bay and St. Mary's River (separating it from Ontario) on the E. and Lake Huron and Michigan and the state of Wisconsin on the S. while the southern (the Lower Peninsula) is bounded on the E by Lake Huron, St. Clair and Erie, and the St. Clair and Detroit rivers (forming part of the boundary with Ontario) on the W by Lake Michigan and on the S by the states of Ohio and Indiana, its northern angle reaching the Strait of Mackinac, which separates it from the Upper Peninsula. The state includes numerous islands, of which the largest are Isle Royale and Grand Island in Lake Superior. Drummond and Bois Blanc islands in Lake Huron and the Munton group in Lake Michigan. Michigan extends through nearly 6 degrees of latitude, from the parallel of 41° 43' N to that of 47° 32' N. Area of the land-surface, 57 430 sq m.

Face of the Country—The Lower Peninsula is the principal seat of wealth and population. Its characteristic features are the extensive forests of white pine and deciduous timber trees in the N. the sand-dunes of the western lake-coast, the bluff shores of Lake Huron, with its deeply indenting Saginaw Bay and the picturesque oak openings or natural parks of the center and S. This peninsula is a very fertile fruitful region abounding in lakes and streams the latter (Assable, Cheboygan, Grand Huron, Kalamazoo, Muskegon, Raisin) not large, but in many cases navigable to a considerable extent, while others afford much water power. The streams of the northern forests are much resorted to in the season for the trout and grayling which here abound. The undulating surface culminates in a ridge or water-shed which hardly rises 300 feet above the lake-level (580 feet) and there are occasional conical hills or knolls. The Upper Peninsula has in general a rough or mountainous surface, a markedly temperate or even cold climate, and a ruggedly mill but its mineral wealth is remarkable. Its mountains (Porcupine and Mineral ranges) though rugged, have not a great absolute elevation (Porcupine Mountain, 2023 feet, the culminating point of the state) and in some portions the forests are a source of wealth. The largest streams in this section are the Kalamazoo, Ford, Manistique, Ontonagon, and Toquamenon flanked to the E. and SE on the one hand and to the W. and NW on the other by extensive fields of Silurian and Cambrian strata. The Archæan region, or that which has been more recently designated Algonkian, affords immense beds of rich magnetite and red hematite (Penokee-Geoghe and Marquette-Monomie series) of unrivalled purity and excellence. This is quarried and shipped by lake and by rail and is largely smelted in the iron works of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, etc. and is also wrought in the furnaces erected on the spot. Michigan holds second place among the states of the Union as a producer of iron, the product in 1903 having been 19,600,330 long tons, of which 10,592,933 tons were red hematite and 7,297 tons magnetite. The product in 1901 was 9,654,057 tons. The value of the iron product of 1903 was $25,483,075, averaging $2.40 per ton (about 16,500,000 tons). In the northwestern Cambrian district, upon the Keweenaw peninsula, which projects into Lake Superior and to the SE, extend the Mineral Mountains (or Copper Range) where large masses of pure and nearly pure native copper are mined, with occasional veins richly alloyed with silver. These are among the most valuable copper mines in the United States. The copper-mines of Isle Royale belong to this geological formation and on the Canadian side of Lake Superior the Algonkian country affords not less rich deposits of this same mineral. Abundant evidence exists in the copper region that the mines were wrought in prehistoric times and the native copper implements of the old mound-builders were very probably derived from this source. The production of copper in the Upper Peninsula, in 1901 was 69,772 long tons.

Geology and Minerals—The Upper Peninsula consists of a central area of Archean or Laurentian and Huronian age,

The geological features of the Lower Peninsula are very different from those of the Upper. Devonian and Carboniferous strata sever most of this, the main, part of the state. The coal measures extend over an area of several thousand square miles and furnish much valuable mineral. The quantity of coal mined in 1903 was 1,897,819 short tons, virtually all bituminous. Salt is extensively manufactured from the waters of artesian wells. The product of the state in 1904 somewhat exceeded 5,400,000 barrels. Petroleum has been obtained to some extent especially northward, and inflammable oil-bearing shales, both Devonian and Carboniferous, are abundant at various points. Useful mineral waters are reported in nearly all parts of the Lower Peninsula. Gypsum for land-plaster and for stucco-work, lime, glass-sand, grindstones, fire-clay and building stones (sandstones and marbles) are among the useful mineral products. A large portion of the surface of the Lower Peninsula is covered with glacial drift.

Objects of Interest to Tourists.—Among these are the famous Plotted Rocks of wind and wave-worn sandstone in Lake Superior, the iron- and copper-mines, the canal and rapids of Sault Ste. Marie on the St. Mary River, the outlet of Lake Superior and the remarkable artificial channel and works for the improvement of navigation through the Straits in Lake St. Clair. Mackinaw, Mount Clemens, Ottawa Beach and Petokey are favorite resorts.

Agricultural Resources.—Few sections of the United States excel the Lower Peninsula of Michigan as a farming region. The oak openings and dry prairies were first settled, the wet prairie-lands followed, their drainage proving easy, profitable and advantageous to public health. The forest lands when subdued proved to be among the best wheat lands in the world. In the W. and SW. occurs the great fruit-belt of the state, where the proximity of Lake Michigan so tempers the west winds that even the peach succeeds admirably. As far N. as Grand Traverse the climate is not too cold for successful agriculture. The winter wheat, oats and potatoes of the state are of excellent quality and are produced abundantly. The yield of the chief crops cultivated in 1900 was: corn 38,683,400 bushels, wheat 9,271,764 bushels, oats 33,669,536 bushels, barley 904,806 bushels, rye, 1,041,098 bushels, potatoes, 10,630,941 bushels and hay 1,737,517 tons. Other leading products are butter, cheese, wool, beef, pork, brock, wheat, hay, beans, peas, hops, flax, flaxseed, clover and grass-seeds, maple sugar, wax, honey, sorghum and maple syrup, etc. Excellent horses and cattle are bred for the Eastern markets. Grape-culture is successful in the S. and wine is a noteworthy product. Of the Upper Peninsula the resources are comparatively undeveloped.

Climate.—The climate of Michigan is marked by extremes of winter temperature, the thermometer in some sections not infrequently marking -30° to -35° . The summers are warm but not excessively hot, the maximum temperature being about 100° . The mean annual rainfall is about 30 inches.

Lumber and Manufactures.—Besides pine, Michigan cuts much oak, maple, and other hard timber as well as spruce, hemlock, hemlock, and other kinds of coarse lumber.

The S. side of the Upper Peninsula is admirably adapted to the lumber-business, having unlimited water-power and waters available for navigation, with large forests as yet comparatively untouched. The state holds after Wisconsin the first place among the lumber-producing states of the Union. The production of pine-lumber in 1900 was 1,124,491,000 feet of hemlock, 732,999,000 ft. of hard-wood, 512,201,000 ft. The output of shingles alone was 1,155,723,000. The total area covered by forest lands in 1900 was 58,000 sq. m. Among the forest products are tanners' bark, bark-extract, eucalypt and potash. Manufactures of wooden-ware, furniture, and other similar goods are carried on upon an immense scale in the cities of Michigan. References has already been made to the important manufactures of iron, salt, etc. To these must be added the manufactures of farm-implements, leather and leather goods, woollens, cottons, machinery, bellows, castings, etc. The manufacture of beet-sugar is now an important industry of the state. In 1890 there were 1355 cigar- and tobacco-factories in operation, turning out a product of 164,576,350 cigars and 15,129,215 pounds of tobacco. The values of the products of the chief industries in 1900 were: lumber and timber products, $83,121,969; flouring products, $22,779,829; foundry and machine-shop products, $13,363,030; furniture, $10,707,638; carriages and wagons, $5,699,941; and iron and steel $5,879,341.

Commerce.—The extent of lake coast is far larger than that of any other state. Good natural harbors exist on the shores of all three lakes and many of the river mouths and coast-lagoons have been converted by artificial means into safe and excellent harbors. Notwithstanding the existence of numerous railroads the lake commerce still thrives and is especially adapted to the shipment of coal, iron-ore, lumber and other bulky freights. Detroit, Marquette, Port Huron, and Grand Haven are ports of entry and Superior, Ashland and Gladstone subports of entry. The catch of white-fish, trout, grayling, herring (so called) pickerel, sturgeon, and other fish is very important.

The railroads of Michigan in 1846 measured 238 miles; in 1850 342 miles; in 1860 779 miles; in 1870 1938 miles; in 1880 3635 miles; in 1890 7190 miles and in 1900 8240 miles.

Counties, etc.—There are 83 counties. Alcona, Alger, Alcona, Alpena, Antrim, Arenac, Benzie, Barry, Bay, Benzie, Berrien, Branch, Calhoun, Cam, Charlevoix, Cheboygan, Chippewa, Clare, Clinton, Crawford, Delta, Dickinson, Eaton, Emmet, Genesee, Gladwin, Gogebin, Grand Traverse, Gratiot, Hilledale, Houghton, Huron, Ingham, Ionia, Isabella, Iron, Jackson, Kalamazoo, Kalamazoo, Kent, Keweenaw, Lake, Leelanau, Leelanau, Leelanau, Livingston, Lapeer, Mackinac, Macomb, Manistee, Marquette, Mason, Mecosta, Menominee, Midland, Muskegon, Montcalm, Montcalm, Montmorency, Mackinac, Newaygo, Oakland, Oceana, Ogemaw, Ontonagon, Oscoda, Oshtemo, Ottawa, Presque Isle, Roscommon, Saginaw, St. Clair, St. Joseph, Sanilac, Schoolcraft, Shiawassee, Tuscola, Van Buren, Washtenaw, Wayne, and Wexford.

The principal cities are Detroit (pop. in 1900 285,704), Grand Rapids (87,505), Saginaw (42,345), Bay City (27,628), Jackson (25,180), Kalamazoo (24,404), Muskegon (20,819), Port Huron (19,159), Battle Creek (18,568), Lansing the capital (16,456), Manistee, West Bay City, Ann Arbor and Flint.

Education.—The state maintains normal schools at Mount Pleasant, Marquette, and Ypsilanti, and there are normal training and collegiate institutions in other cities and towns. The state university or University of Michigan with full facilities in science and art, law and medicine, is located at Ann Arbor and is one of the leading educational institutions of the country. The state agricultural college is near Lansing and the Michigan College of Mines at Houghton. Other collegiate institutions are Adrian, Albion, Alma, Detroit, Hilledale, Kalamazoo, etc. colleges, in the towns indicated by their names. At Coldwater is a state school for the children of paupers, a reform school and school for the blind at Lansing, one for deaf-mutes at Flint and an industrial home for girls at Adrian. Other public institutions are the state prison at Jackson and the state insane asylum at Kalamazoo and other asylums at Pontiac, Traverse City and Newberry.

Government.—The governor and the members of the legislature are elected every two years. The state has 12 representatives in the lower house of the federal Congress.

Population.—In 1810 the population was 4763; in 1820 8896; in 1830 31,639; in 1840 212,267; in 1850 397,654; in 1860 749,115; in 1870 1,164,959; in 1880 1,936,637; in 1890 2,993,689; in 1900 2,496,962. About one-fifth of the inhabitants are foreign born, the Canadians and Germans being the most numerous of the foreign-born inhabitants.

History.—In the second half of the seventeenth century the French established mission stations and posts on the shores of Michigan, and in 1701 they made a settlement at Detroit. The country passed, with Canada, into English hands in 1763. Then followed the conspiracy of Pontiac, the destruction of Mackinac, and the siege of Detroit. As a result of the Revolutionary War the English relinquished possession of the region although they did not evacuate it until 1796. In 1805 the Michigan Territory was constituted out of the old Northwest Territory. Its boundaries at one time extended westward to the Missouri River. In 1837 the state of Michigan was admitted to the Union with its present limits. The territory was the scene of active operations during a part of the war of 1812-15.

Milano, mill an or mil an (It. Milano me-lah no Cer. Milano mil lant auc. Mediola num) the largest city of Lombardy and the second city in size of Italy, capital of a province of its own name, 7½ miles ENE of Turin. Lat. of the Pons observatory 45° 27' 59" N. Lon. 9° 11' 30" E. It is situated in a beautiful and fertile plain on the navigable Olona, between the Adige and Ticino which in this part of their course, feed three separate canals one of which the Naviglio Grande or Great Canal encircling a considerable portion of the interior of the city divides it into two unequal parts while the other two on the outside are available both for irrigation and traffic. Milan is built in the form of an irregular polygon and is surrounded by canals, which were once flanked with massive bastions. These have been almost entirely removed and the place occupied by them and the earthen ramparts has been converted into a shaded promenade. The city is 7 miles in circumference and is entered by several gates. The Piazza d'Armi a large space obtained by the demolition of the citadel and its outworks has in greater part been converted into a public park.

The focus of the busy life of the city is the Piazza del Duomo in which stands the celebrated cathedral (du mo) la cattedrale the largest church of Europe after St. Peter's at Rome and the cathedral of Seville and one of the most magnificent specimens of Gothic architecture. The edifice constructed of white marble the erection of which was begun in 1387 covers an area of 14,000 square yards and is capable of accommodating 40,000 people. The interior measures 488 feet in length. The exterior presents a unique appearance with its more than 2000 statues, its many pinnacles and its exquisite carvings. The other remarkable structures are the church of Sant'Ambrogio erected in the site of a church founded by St. Ambrose about 387 which contains so many ancient crypts and other relics as to form a rich museum of Christian antiquities the church of Sant'Eustorgio with interesting monuments the church of Santa Maria della Grazie belonging to the abbey and monastery of Santa Maria della Grazie in whose refectory is the celebrated Last Supper by Leonardo da Vinci the church of Santa Maria delle Grazie with a magnificent museum the church of San Lorenzo the most ancient church of Milan the Palazzo Reale the archiepiscopal palace (dating from 1665) adjoining the cathedral the Palazzo Marino the seat of the municipality the former Palazzo della Ragione now the coin exchange, situated in the Piazza del Verment, the central point of the medieval city the Palazzo di Giustizia the Galleria Vittorio Emanuele, a beautiful and costly arcade building occupied by shops, and measuring 320 yards in length the market the barracks forming a long and elegant range of buildings capable of holding 4000 men the prisons, one of which is regarded as a model of its kind the house of correction at Porta Nuova the vast arena and a great number of theatres, among which that called La Scala, dating from 1778 and one of the most famous of Europe, takes precedence, accommodating 3000 spectators.

The chief scientific and educational institutions are the Brera, now known as the Palazzo di Scienze, Lettere ed Arti dating from 1651 and containing a library of about 230,000 volumes, valuable manuscripts, a picture-gallery rich in the choicest productions of the old Italian masters, an astronomical and magnetical observatory considered the finest in Italy and an archaeological museum the Museo Poldi-Pezzoli the Ambrosian Library with 18,000 volumes and 8500 manuscripts the Trivulzio Library the royal cabinet of coins, the municipal museum of natural history the royal scientific and literary academy royal technical institute, schools of medicine, agriculture, and veterinary science, a higher commercial institute several learned societies and a military geographical institute. Among the benevolent endowments is the Ospedale Maggiore, one of the largest hospitals in the world. The city is ornamented with a number of monumental sculptures, the best known of which is the equestrian statue, on the Piazza del Duomo of Victor Emmanuel II erected in 1886. Milan is the seat of an archbishop.

From its position on the great routes across the Alps and its connection by canals with the principal rivers of Italy Milan is favorably situated for trade. Its manufactures comprise silk, velvet, ribbons, lace, cotton and woollen goods, carpets, jewelry, glass, paper, porcelain, pipes, carriages, art-furniture, and machinery. It is the chief publishing centre and book mart of Italy.

Milan is very ancient. It rose to great importance under the later Roman emperors. In the latter part of the fourth century when it was occupied by Saint Ambrose, the bishopric of Milan was one of the most important of the episcopal sees. In the twelfth century Milan was the most powerful of the city republics of northern Italy which waged war against the emperor Frederick Barbarossa. About a century and a half later the city fell under the rule of the powerful family of the Visconti. In 1395 Milan with its territory was erected into a duchy for this house, whose dominions finally embraced a great part of Lombardy. The Visconti dynasty ended in 1447 and in 1450 the ducal house of Sforza was established. During the period 1498-1535 the duchy was repeatedly in the hands of the French. In 1545 on the extinction of the Sforza dynasty it was taken possession of by the emperor Charles V. who united it with the crown of Spain. The Milanese (territory of Milan) was ceded by Spain to Austria in 1714 (see LOMBARDY). Milan was the capital of the short-lived kingdom of Italy established by Napoleon (1805-14). Pop. in 1901 491,480.

Milwaukee, the most populous city of Wisconsin a port of entry and county seat of Milwaukee co. is situated on the W shore of Lake Michigan at the mouth of the Milwaukee River 89 miles N of Chicago on the Chicago and Northwestern the Chicago Milwaukee and St. Paul, the Wisconsin Central and the Pere Marquette R. Lat. 43° 3' N lon 87° 57' W Milwaukee harbor is now one of the best harbors on the Great Lakes and the largest vessels can approach quite to the warehouses. The city is advantageously situated along the banks of the Milwaukee River and the Menomonee and Kinnickinnick tributaries and the transportation facilities afforded by these water ways have made it one of the chief manufacturing and commercial centres of the north-central section of the Union. The chief articles of its extensive commerce are grain (wheat, barley, corn, oats, rye) flour and lumber. Its grain elevators have a capacity of over 4 000 000 bushels. The product of the flouring mills, whose capacity ranks immediately after those of Minneapolis, is frequently 16 000 barrels per day. One of the most prominent industries is that of beer brewing the Milwaukee lager beer being known throughout the entire United States, the annual production of this beverage being between 2 000 000 and 2 500 000 barrels. Other important industries are represented in vast rolling mills and machine-shops slaughtering and packing establishments, and manufacturing of engines, knit goods, leather, lumber, carriages, furniture, agricultural implements, tobacco, bricks, etc. The residence portions of the city on high ground above the busy valleys along the streams are noted for their beautiful shaded avenues (Graced in Prospect Avenue Waverly Place etc.) and elegant homes. Milwaukee contains many fine public and educational edifices, among the most prominent of which are the Federal building (erected in 1896-98) the city hall, a city court-house, chamber of commerce, exposition building (with a museum and state fish hatchery) Layton Art Gallery and the state new Public Library and Museum (containing about 150 000 volumes). The city has a state normal school, an industrial school for girls, and various collegiate institutions (Concordia, Marquette, and the Milwaukee Divinity College) and in the vicinity is a Naval Soldiers Home. The city has a number of attractive parks (Lake, Washington, Juniper, Heuboldt, Riverside, etc.) some of which contain fine monumental works. The Forest Home Cemetery ranks as one of the most beautiful burial grounds of the United States. Milwaukee was settled in 1835 and incorporated as a city in 1846. It is the seat of a Roman Catholic archbishop and of a Protestant Episcopal bishop. The population in 1850 was 20 001 in 1870 71 440 in 1890 115 567 in 1890 204 468 in 1900 283 315. Minneapolis, a banking city, capital of Ottawa co., Kan., on the Solomon River and on the Atchison Topeka and Santa Fe and the Union Pacific Rrs. 23 miles NW of Solomon City. Pop in 1900 1737.

Minneapolis, the first city of Minnesota in population and importance and the capital of Hennepin co., is situated on both banks of the Mississippi River, at the Falls of St. Anthony just above St. Paul, the wide-spreading suburbs of the two cities being contiguous. Lat 44° 58' N., lon 93° 18' W. Elevation above the sea, 740-800 feet. The number of railroads entering or centering here is about 20. Its invigorating climate, marked by an extreme of dry winter cold, with the mercury at times descending to -30° and mild summer temperatures, has given Minneapolis great reputation as a health resort. It is laid out with regularity and many of its intersecting streets are from 80 to 190 feet or more (Kimwood Boulevard) in width and contain a number of imposing edifices. The most prominent of these is the new court-house and city hall, completed in 1896 at a cost of $4,000,000. Other public buildings are the chamber of commerce, the Union depot, lumber exchange, Masonic temple, public library and art gallery (with about 100,000 volumes and collections of paintings and natural history) etc. Here is the seat of the University of Minnesota, neo-sectarian and providing free tuition and equal privileges for both sexes. It was founded in 1851 and has several colleges, faculties of arts, chemistry, engineering, agriculture, mining, medicine, etc. a library of 50,000 volumes, a vast campus and, connected with its agricultural college an experiment farm. The attendance at the university in 1903-04 was 3325, including 108 graduate students. Here are also the Augsburg Theological Seminary and the medical department of Hamline University (St. Paul). There are in addition many private and parochial schools, a conservatory of music, and the Minnesota Normal School. Besides its opera-houses and first-class theatres, Minneapolis has several music and assembly halls. The city covers an area of 54 sq m and is embellished with upward of 30 parks of which Minnehaha Park, about 6 miles S embraces the famous Minnehaha Falls. Lake Minnetonka, a few miles away and accessible by several lines of railroad is a favorite summer-resort. For its electric-car system complete within its own limits, Minneapolis has frequent communication with St. Paul. With its magnificent water power it now ranks as one of the leading manufacturing cities of the country. In deer and lumber products it is the foremost city of the world, its numerous saw-mills having a daily capacity of 80,000 barrels. The quantity of lumber cut by the Minneapolis mills in 1901 was 578,000,000 feet. The city is one of the largest wheat-marts in the world, upward of 60,000,000 bushels of wheat having been received in the course of a single year. Its general manufacturing industries include car building and the making of machinery, iron goods, malted liquors, etc. Pop in 1870 13,066 or including St. Anthony (incorporated with Minneapolis in 1873), 18,979. Minnesotia, a state of the American Union in the N part of the Mississippi valley bounded on the N by Manitoba and Ontario, on the E by Lake Superior and the state of Wisconsin on the S by Iowa, and on the W by the states of North Dakota and South Dakota. Its extreme northern limit is lat 49° N (except that there is a small detached area NW of the Lake of the Woods, with a few islands in that lake, lying N of the Lake of the Woods) eastward from the Lake of the Woods the line ascends Reddy Lake River and a chain of lakes and streams to Mountain Lake, whence it passes by a short portage to the headwaters of the Arrow River which stream it follows to Pigeon River down which it passes to Pigeon Bay Lake Superior. The rivers St. Croix and Mississippi constitute the principal portion of the eastern line, S of the point where it leaves Lake Superior. The southern limit is lat 43° 30' N. On the W the state has the Red River of the North with Lakes Traverse and Big Stone, southward from which the boundary line follows the meridian of 90° 25' W. Area of the land-surface, 78,205 sq m. of the appertaining waters, 4160 sq m.

Face of the Country—The surface of the state is in the main composed of undulating plains diversified by knolls and an abundance of lakes and rivers. There are no true mountain elevations except in the NE where the Mesabi (or Mesabi) Range attains 2100 feet. Brule (or Brule) Mountain in the extreme NE rises to 2044 feet. Conspicuous features are the great marshes of the NE covered by a small growth of tamarack and fir with low parallel pine-clad ridges of dry land, the great white-pine belt which covers nearly one third of the state chiefly northward of the Mississippi River and extends indefinitely northward the Big Woods, a strip of forest-land covered with oak, elm, maple, ash and other deciduous trees stretching southward from the Crow Wing River to within about 60 miles of the Iowa boundary line, the productive and beautiful rolling country in the SE, the great undulating prairie of the S and SW, gradually ascending to the north-west-central Height of Land or Laurentian Trench. From the remotest sources of the Mississippi (height 1600 feet) the country is somewhat rapidly northward the Lake of the Woods being only 1000 ft in elevation and the Red River at St. Vincent is 100 ft. Much of the lower valley is a dead level. The most remarkable natural feature in the state is Lake Superior (1600 ft) to the crest edge of its surrounding plateau (1500 ft) the ascent of 100 ft being made in a few miles. The lowest point on the Mississippi is on an elevation of 600 ft.

Hydrography—A remarkable feature of Minnesota is formed by its myriads of clear lakes, arising in great numbers from a few acres up to great basins of water like Leech, Red, Millelacs, Cass, Vermilion and others take some of them singly covering hundreds of square miles. The lake are said to exceed 7000 in number. They are conspicuously frequent along the divides or water-sheds. Lake Itasca (1460 ft) is the receptacle of the streams that give birth to the Mississippi. The northeastern border of the state is in the St. Lawrence basin the N and NW in that of Hudson Bay the extreme SW in the valley of the Missouri but the greater part of the state is in the valley proper of the upper Mississippi. Many of the lakes especially in the western part, have no outlets. The principal streams of the state are the Mississippi and its tributaries, direct or indirect—the Crow Wing, Rain, Crow, St. Croix, Minnesota, Mankato, Elk etc. the St. Louis and the numerous other affluents of Lake Superior, the Red River with its tributaries, in the NW, the Itasca Lake River with its Big and Little Forks, and other affluents. The larger streams of those part named although but little used in navigation are all navigable to a greater or less extent at high water except in winter and the lake-channels and swift streams of the N are the principal highways of that lonely region being traversed by canoe, a conveyance which in winter is replaced by sledges drawn by dogs. Many of the streams have rapids and falls, affording abundant water power, and the lakes and rivers abound in valuable fishes.

Climate—The winter is severe and in the N is intensely cold with the mercury in many parts of the state not infrequently descending to -40° but it is a matter of frequent remark that the dry and steady cold of Minnesota is much more endurable than the climate of a New England winter. The winters throughout most of the state are short and spring and autumn are long and pleasant seasons. The summer heat is high in the interior and western parts, a shade temperature of 100° and more being recorded. The rainfall is not very copious but it is well distributed throughout the year and its waters are well husbanded in the numerous lakes of the state. The annual precipitation ranges from 10 inches in the NW to 30 inches in the SE.

Mississippi, mis-sis-ipp-ee (Missi Sip-ee), the Great Water, the largest and most important river of the United States rises in the N. part of Minnesota, at an elevation of about 1600 feet above tide-water. Its chief source is Itasca Lake (lat. 47° 10' N. lon. 95° 12' W.) which is 1440 ft. above sea level and about 2500 miles from the mouth of the river. It takes an initial easterly course, expands into Lake Cass and other lakes and below Crow Wing Falls Vt. and SE. to St. Cloud and Minneapolis At Minneapolis 2160 miles from the mouth the Falls of St. Anthony constitute the head of navigation for large vessels. The river here descends 60 ft. to less than 1 mile. It passes by the city of St. Paul and a few miles lower strikes the boundary of Wisconsin and expands into the long and beautiful Lake Pepin bordered by vertical limestone bluffs, which are about 400 ft. high and very picturesque. Below La Crosse its general direction is southward and it forms the boundary between the states of Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas and Louisiana on the right and Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee and Mississippi on the left. After an extremely sinuous course it enters the Gulf of Mexico by several mouths (as at) the SE. extremity of Plaquemine parish La. in lat. 30° N. and lon. 90° 12' W.

Its largest affluents are the Missouri, Ohio, Arkansas, and Red rivers, besides which it receives the Minnesota, Iowa, Des Moines, and St. Francis from the right, and the St. Croix, Chippewa, Wisconsin, Illinois, Kaskaskia, Yazoo and Big Black rivers from the left. The total output of the stream from the source of the Missouri to the Gulf of Mexico is computed to be 4200 miles, which exceeds that of any other river in the world. The area drained by this river and its tributaries is approximately 1,240,000 sq. m. It is computed that the mean volume of water discharged by it in a second is 970,000 cubic feet. It is so gaged by large steamboats from its mouth to St. Paul a distance of about 2150 miles. Steamboats can ascend the Missouri to Fort Benton which is about 900 miles from its mouth or about 3500 miles from the Gulf of Mexico. The chief cities on the Mississippi prior to descending downward, are Minneapolis, St. Paul, La Crosse, Dubuque, Alton, Hannibal, Davenport, Rock Island, Burlington, Keokuk, Quincy, Hannibal, Alton, St. Louis, Cairo, Memphis, Helena, Vicksburg, Natchez, Baton Rouge, and New Orleans. The river is about 3500 ft. wide at St. Louis 4000 ft. wide at the mouth of the Ohio and about 2500 ft. at New Orleans. The mean velocity of the current between St. Louis and the Gulf of Mexico is about 60 miles per day. The Mississippi valley comprises a vast extent of very fertile land, which is nearly level or gently undulating. As the river runs southward and traverses 18 degrees of latitude, the climate and productions of the lower part differ greatly from those of the upper part of the valley. The middle and upper courses of the river are bordered by bluffs 100-400 ft. in height the margins of the prairie-lands that extend far into the interior. The valley between these bluffs frequently measures several miles in width. In Louisiana and Mississippi the river is bordered by alluvial plains and swamps which are lower than the surface of the water and are often inundated though partly protected by artificial embankments called levees. The high level of flow is maintained as the result of the river's own sedimentation the accumulation of silt in the stream a channel. In its lower course the Mississippi frequently shifts its bed here and there for a stretch of several miles as the soft bank on one side is worn away by the force of the current or the waters cut a passage through a peninsula formed by a loop in the river. The greatest floods occur in the spring after the snow and ice of the upper Mississippi have been melted. The water begins to rise about the 1st of March and increases until June. The levees are sometimes burst or overcome by the violence of the flood which rushes through crevasses and devastates large tracts of arable land of which cotton and sugar are the staple products. The greatest variations between extreme flood water and the lowest stage have been noted at Cairo to be 53 ft. and at Vicksburg 55 ft. At the mouth of the river a large delta has been formed by the mud and detritus carried down by the current. This delta is intersected by a number of outlets or water-courses called bayous, which issue from the Mississippi or derive from its supply of water in time of a flood. The area of this delta is about 12,360 sq. m. one-third of which is sea-marsh. The amount of silt or sediment carried to the Gulf of Mexico by this river is about 1-15000th the weight of the water and the new soil deposited in an average year would cover an area of nearly 270 sq. m. with the thickness of one foot. The water enters the Gulf by six channels called the Northern Pass, the Southeast Pass, South Pass, etc. The navigation of these passes is partly obstructed by sand-banks, which are continually formed or shifted, and to obviate this difficulty a remarkable system of jetties (the Batou Jetties) has been constructed in the South Pass by means of which a depth of water 30-34 feet has been maintained. The importances of the Mississippi River as a commercial highway has suffered greatly through railroad construction and has been reduced to a mere fraction of its former extent. The river is crossed by numerous bridges at Memphis (elevation of river-surface 196 feet) by the only bridge between St. Louis and New Orleans (St. Louis elevation 580-400 ft. depending upon the stage of the water) Hannibal (470 ft.) Quincy, Keokuk, Rock Island, Clinton, Dubuque (505 ft.) La Crosse (540 ft.), St. Paul (58-702 ft.) Minneapolis etc. The Mississippi River was discovered by the Spaniard De Soto in 1541. In 1682 the Frenchman La Salle descended it to its mouth.

Mississippi, one of the Gulf States of the American Union bounded N. by Tennessee, E. by Alabama, S. by the Gulf of Mexico and Louisiana, and W. by Arkansas and Louisiana, from which two states it is separated by the Mississippi River. In the extreme S. the state is separated from Louisiana by the Pearl River and for its northern limit it has the 35th degree of N. lat. Area of the land-surface, 46,540 sq. m. of the appurtenant waters about 470 sq. m.

Face of the Country—Along the Mississippi above Vicksburg a vast and partially swampy tract of timbered and cultivated land extends northward beyond the state line and eastward beyond the Tennessee River and is protected from frequent overflows through the erection of strong levees. Several hundred miles of the Mississippi front in this state are thus protected. In the NE. there is an exceedingly fertile region formerly prairie, bounded on the W. by the St. Louis woods, a densely wooded tract. The north and north-central portions are rolling and in most parts fertile. Eastward of the Yazoo there are high bluffs of drift (or loess) which approach the Mississippi at Vicksburg, Natchez, and other points. These bluffs (the loess hills) are deeply broken with valleys and water worn ridges and are often composed of more fertile soil. The great level pine region (or cow-country) of Mississippi, which at one time covered the greater part of the southern third of the state, affords much natural pasture and large amounts of timber and naval stores. No elevation in the state can be dignified with the name of mountain and the highest point of land does not appear to exceed greatly 600 feet. Apart from the Mississippi the more important rivers of the state are the Yazoo, Big Black, Pearl, Tombigbee (upper course) and Pascagoula (formed by the Leaf and the Little Catwaba).

Geology—In the N. the Alabama coal measures occupy a small area of this state, but are represented only by their lower or unproductive strata, and Mississippi has no true coal although deposits of good lignite (of Tertiary and Cretaceous age) are not wanting. The northeastern plains are Cretaceous and are very fertile. The most widely prevailing formation is the Tertiary. The lowlands along the Mississippi and the Gulf are of Tertiary and alluvial character and in fact the greater part of the state lies within the ancient embayment-area of the Mississippi River. The orange or tawny Quaternary sands with their curious conical knolls or trikins, physiographic features. Lime rough sandstone, shale, clay, phosphatic rock, etc. are obtained but no ore of any consequence is mined in the state.

Vegetation—The marshy regions abound in cypress, bay, black gum and other timber trees. The pine forests have already been alluded to. In the hilly country there are still valuable woodlands of oak, hickory, locust, walnut, hickory, etc. The native fruits include the persimmon, pawpaw, Chickasaw plum, Ogechee lime and excellent grapes. The T. floridana (or Spanish moss) affords a fibre much used by upholsterers and the abundant cane (Arundo donax) yields a useful paper stock.

Climate—The greater part of the state lies in the sub-tropical belt and has thus a climate marked by high summer and annual temperatures and by mild winters. The average January temperature to the extreme N. is about 50° and in the northern sections 40°. A minimum temperature of 15° (or exceptionally even 10°) has been noted. The average annual rainfall is somewhat over 50 inches.

Agriculture.—The NE. Cretaceous districts and the low Mississippi bottom-lands are of almost inexhaustible fertility and support a large agricultural population. Through out the pine region there are fertile tracts of cotton land. Southward there is considerable rice and sugar-cane culture. Cotton and Indian corn are the staple products. The chief agricultural crops were for the year 1899 corn 25,351,998 bushels oats, 2,596,652 bushels wheat, 44,781 bushels potatoes 347,094 bushels and hay 99,922 tons. The commercial crop of cotton was 1,293,736 bales, the state ranking third among the cotton producing states of the Union. The total area given over to the cultivation of cotton was estimated to be 2,896,000 acres. Grazing is a fairly important industry the small cattle finding abundant pasturage in the wide forests. Meat pork is produced and the annual wool-clip is considerable. Honey wax, butter sweet potatoes, sorghum, pulses, tobacco, etc., are products of minor importance. The climate is well adapted for agriculture and vine-growing. The orange flourish in the south the pomegranate and fig grow in most parts without protection and the peach is found in a half wild state.

Manufactures.—The most extensive manufacturing interest is the cutting and sawing of lumber. The chief seats of this occupation are the lower valleys of the Pascagoula and Pearl rivers and the products are shipped both by rail and by water. The shipments of yellow pine lumber during eleven months of 1900 amounted to 2,018,183 feet, while the output during the same period was 366,343,802 feet. The total value of the lumber and timber products was in 1900 $15,656,116. The manufacture of cotton-seed oil and oil-cakes (valued in 1900 at $4,631,121) and of naval stores has acquired some importance. Other manufactures are chiefly local.

Commerce.—The river-towns and the railroad centres do a large forwarding and distributing business. The sheltered sound, with its diverging bays and lagoons, affords safe and untroubled passage for coasting vessels, although the state has no harbor with sufficient water for large shipping. Besides the Mississippi, steam navigation ascends the Yesso, Tallahatchee, Yazoo, Pascagoula, and Tombigbee rivers, and is to some extent practicable upon the Big Black Sunflower and Pearl rivers.

Railroads.—In 1846 there were 42 miles of railroad in 1850 6 miles in 1860 862 miles in 1870 990 miles in 1880 117 miles in 1890 2470 miles and in 1900 2932 miles.

The counties number 76 as follows: Adams, Alcorn, Amite, Attala, Benton, Bolivar, Calhoun, Carroll, Chickasaw, Choctaw, Claiborne, Clarke, Clay, Coahoma, Copiah, Covington, De Soto, Franklin, Greene, Grundy, Hancock, Harrison, Hinds, Holmes, Issaquena, Itawamba, Jackson, Jasper, Jefferson, Jones, Kemper, Lafayette, Landerdale, Lawrence, Leake, Lee, Leflore, Lincoln, Lowndes, Madison, Marion, Marshall, Monroe, Montgomery, Neshoba, Newton, Nottoway, Oktibbeha, Osage, Pearl River, Perry, Pike, Pontotoc, Prentiss, Quitman, Rankin, Scott, Sharkey, Simpson, Smith, Sunflower, Tallahatchee, Tate, Tippah, Tishomingo, Toulon, Union, Warren, Washington, Wayne, Webster, Wilkinson, Winston, Yazoo, and Yazoo.

Principal Towns.—These are Vicksburg (pop. in 1900 14,834) Meridian (14,650) Natchez (12,218) Jackson the capital (816) Greenville (7642) Columbus (6434) Dubuque (3467) Yazoo City, McComb, and Aberdeen.

Government.—The governor and principal executive officers are chosen for a term of 4 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives, the members of both bodies being elected for 4 years. The state has 6 representatives in the lower house of Congress.

Education.—There are normal schools and colleges at Holly Springs, Louisville, Troy, Walthall, Walnut Grove, and elsewhere. Oxford is the seat of the state university and the state agricultural and mechanical college is situated at Agricultural College. Tongue University with normal industrial model, intermediate and primary departments, instructs colored students. Other collegiate institutions are the Mississippi College, at Clinton, the North Mississippi Presbyterian Female College and Holly Springs Normal Institute, at Holly Springs, Millsaps College, at Jackson, Whitworth Female College at Brookhaven, and the Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical College (for colored) at Watkins.

Population. In 1806 8850 in 1810 49,362 in 1820 75,448 in 1830 136,621 in 1840 375,851 in 1850, 665,948 in 1860 791,306 of whom 436,631 were slaves in 1870, 827,222 in 1880 1,131,587 in 1890 1,299,800 in 1900 1,551,270. The negro population in 1900 numbered 607,630. In some sections the negroes are many times more numerous than the whites. The foreign born population in 1900 was only 7981.

History.—De Soto in 1539 entered the northern part of what is now the state of Mississippi. In 1682 the French explorer La Salle descended the Mississippi River to its mouth. He took possession of the region on both sides of the river for Louis XIV and the name of Louisiana was given to it. In 1686 Iberville established a colony not far from the present site of Biloxi. This was soon abandoned, but in 1718 a permanent settlement was made where Biloxi now stands. Vatches (originally Beaulieu) was founded in 1716. In 1763 the region included within the present state, part of which had belonged to Spain, passed to the English. In 1783 most of it became a possession of the United States, part again becoming Spanish (included in West Florida). Mississippi Territory was organized in 1798 and then included a wide strip whose N line ran westward from the Chattahoochee to the Mississippi at the mouth of the Yazoo, no part touching the Gulf. In 1804 Congress annexed to Mississippi a great tract embracing three-fifths of the present area of Mississippi and Alabama, a region which had formerly belonged to Georgia and South Carolina. In 1813 the United States Congress added the Gulf counties taken from Spain to Mississippi, but Spain did not cede them until the purchase of Florida by the United States in 1819. The state was admitted to the Union in 1817 with its present limits. From 1861 to 1865 Mississippi was one of the Confederate states. Reconstruction was completed in 1876.

Mississippi, a northeastern county of Arkansas borders on Missouri. Area, 842 sq. m. It is bounded on the N. by the Mississippi River and is intersected by the Little River and partly bounded on the W. by the Ft. Francis River. Numerous lakes are found in this county the largest being Big Lake. Capital Osceola. Pop. in 1890 11,835 in 1900, 16,384.

Mississippi, a southeastern county of Missouri has an area of 427 sq. m. It is bounded on the N. and E. by the Mississippi River which separates it from Kentucky. Capital Charleston. Pop. in 1890 10,134 in 1900 11,837.

Mississippi City, a port village capital of Harrison Co. Mississippi is on the Gulf of Mexico (Mississippi Sound) and on the Louisville and Natchez R. 71 miles E. by N. of New Orleans. Pop. in 1890 524.

Mississippi River, a river of Ontario, rises in Mississippi Lake, Lanark Co. and flowing northerly 100 miles, enters the Ottawa 7 miles above Arnprior. A good part is navigable for small steamers.

Missouri, a town of Eastern Russia. See Muzassun.

Missolonghi, mis-sol-long-gee, written also Meno-longhi, a town of Greece, capital of the monarchy of Avarania and Etolia, situated on a lagoon which forms part of the Gulf of Patras, about 16 miles E. of the Aspro-Potamo (Achelous) at the base of the Aitolian mountains, 22 miles W. of Lepanto. It is an unimportant place, but carries on considerable trade, although the lagoon is too shallow to permit large vessels to approach the town. It is the seat of an archbishop. Missolonghi was the great stronghold of the Greeks in Western Hellas in the war of liberation heroically withstanding the Turks until 1826, when it fell. Byron closed his career here in 1824. His heart is kept in a mausoleum and a statue of the poet and his likeness adorns the town. Just outside of the place is the tomb of Marou Botzaris, who fell in a sortie from the fortress in 1823. Pop. in 1896 6394.

Missoula, mis-sou-la, a northwestern county of Montana, borders on Idaho. Area, 6385 sq. m. It is intersected by Clarke's River a branch of the Columbia. The surface is mostly mountainous and is extensively covered with forests of pine and other evergreen trees. The Bitter Root Mountains extend along the SW. border of this county. Gold silver and copper are found. Capital, Missoula. Pop. in 1890 3426 in 1900 13,964.

Missoula, a banking city the capital of Missoula Co. Mont. is on a river of the same name near the confluence of the Bitter Root and Hell Gate rivers and on the Northern Pacific R. 54 miles (direct) WNW of Helena. It is in a fertile valley near the Rocky Mountains, in a mining agricultural and fruit-growing region, and is the seat of the University of Montana. The city has bottling works a brewery etc. Pop. in 1900 4366.

Missoula River, Mont. See Bitter Root River.

Missouri, mis-soo-ree (i. e. the "Mind River") a great river of the United States is formed by the confluence of the Jefferson Gallatin and Madison rivers or forks which rise in the Rocky Mountains and unite at Gallatin City. Mouth. This point (lat. 45° 54' N., lon. 111° 24' W.) is 40.2 feet above the level of the sea. The source of the Madison Fork is 8300 feet above sea-level and about 2 miles from one of the head streams of the Snake River. From Gallatin City the river runs nearly northward through a mountainous region and in a valley 20 to 25 miles in width. About 16 miles E. of Helena it passes through a deep and narrow cañon or gorge 6 miles long called the "Gates of the Rocky Mountains. The scenery here is very sublime and imposing. About 350 miles from the junction of the three forks at Great Falls city (elevation 3500 feet) are the Great Falls, where the river descends 400 feet in about 15 miles by a series of cataracts, the highest of which presents a perpendicular fall of nearly 90 feet. At this point the river is narrowed from upward of a half-mile to 300 yards. Forty miles below the Great Falls is Fort Benton, the head of steamboat navigation. From this place the Missouri runs eastward through Chouteau and Dawson cos. Mont. and pursues the same general direction for 500 miles or more beyond.

Near Fort Buford it crosses the eastern boundary of Montana and enters North Dakota in lat. 49° N. Here it is joined by its largest affluent, the Yellowstone, which is about 800 yards wide at its mouth. After reaching the meridian of 105° 30' W. on the Missouri runs southeastward to Bismarck, below which it flows nearly southward for several hundred miles, and through the middle of South Dakota, and traverses vast prairies or grassy plains almost destitute of forest trees. After it has passed the mouth of the Cheyenne (a large affluent which comes from the W.) it changes its course to the SE. forms the N.E. boundary of Nebraska, and strikes the boundary line of Iowa near Sioux City. From this place it flows nearly southward forming the boundary between Iowa and Arkansas. Pursuing next a S.E. direction it forms part of the boundary line between Kansas and the state of Missouri until it reaches Kansas City where it receives another large affluent, the Kansas River. From this point the general direction is eastward across the state of Missouri. It enters the Mississippi River 3 miles below Alton Ill. and 20 miles above St. Louis. It is a turbid stream noted for the rapidity of its current which encroaches on the land and often carries away its banks. It is, including the Jefferson nearly 3000 miles long and exceeds in length as well as in volume the part of the Mississippi above their junction.

The area drained by the Missouri is probably in the neighborhood of 800,000 sq. m. and the average quantity of water discharged by it in a second is said to be 120,000 cu. ft. During high water steamboats can ascend it to Fort Benton which is about 2300 miles from its mouth. Fort Benton is the head of navigation during low water which is in summer and early autumn.

The chief towns on its banks are (in descending order) Great Falls, Fort Benton, Bismarck, Pierre, Yankton, Sioux City, Musselshell, Milk, Little Missouri, Omaha, Council Bluffs, Nebraska City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth, Kansas City (kan.) Kansas City (Mo.) and Jefferson City. The largest affluents of the Missouri besides those already mentioned are the Niobrara, Platte, Big Cheyenne, Dakota (or James) Grand, and Osage.

Missouri, a north-central state of the American Union, bordered on the E. by the Mississippi River and traversed by the great stream whose name it bears. On the N. it is bounded by Iowa, on the S. by Illinois, Kentucky and Tennessee, on the S. by Arkansas and on the W. by Nebraska, Kansas, and Indian Territory. Its southeasternmost counties form a projection which is bounded westward by Arkansas. The mean southern boundary line is the parallel of 36° 30' N. lat. and the northern limit is the parallel of 40° 30'. Area of the land-surface, 68,735 sq. m. of the appertaining waters about 630 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—N. of the Missouri River the surface is a very level or more frequently rolling region diversified by timber and open prairie land. S. of that river there are three well-characterized regions: the open and comparatively treeless plains of the W., continuous with those of Kansas; the Ozark Mountains (Hills) a rough but not greatly elevated country well timbered and continuous southward with the mountains of Arkansas; and the south-eastern marshy tract of exceedingly fertile and well-timbered country which sank to nearly its present level during the earthquakes of 1811-12. From Cape Girardeau southward the Mississippi front is diked or leveed. The highest elevation of this state appears to be less than 2000 feet (Cadagap Wright on 1892 feet). Iron Mountain and Pilot Knob are respectively 1877 and 1913 feet in elevation.

Rivers.—By means of its two great rivers and their navigable branches, Missouri has direct water-communication with almost every state in the Mississippi Valley and of its own minor streams the Osage, Grand, Marmou, Salt, Gasconade, White, St. Francis, and Current, and others have, or have had, some utility as navigable streams but the great extension of railroads has impaired their usefulness in this respect.

Geology. Mineral Wealth.—The two prominent features of Missouri geology are (1) the great Cambro-Silurian Ozark region whose highly metalliferous strata are much broken by dikes and outcrops of Azoic rocks, and (2) the coal-field of the N. and centre, continuous northward and westward with the coal measures of Iowa and Kansas. The S.E. section of the state lies in the alluvial tract of the Mississippi River. The metalliferous ores of Missouri are very rich and abundant. Prominent illustrations of their value are afforded by the Pilot Knob Iron Mountain, Shepherd Mountain, and other mountain like masses of excellent hematite and magnetite ores. The Mine La Motte, with its rich ores of lead and nickel the lead- and zinc-mines of Galena and Joplin and the Vellé and Perry lead-mines of St. Francois co. Missouri has for upward of 150 years produced a great amount of lead, and in some years the product exceeded 50,000,000 pounds. Millions of tons of iron-ores have been mined in years of active iron trade but the product from the once seemingly inexhaustible deposits of Iron and Pilot mountains has of late years been so far diminished as the result of competition with more favored mining centres as to be almost insignificant. The production of zinc holds a leading place in the mining economy of the state and in 1903 the production of spelter was 9994 short tons. The Mine La Motte deposits furnish the main supply of nickel and cobalt production in the United States. Coal mining carried on in 36 counties yielded in 1903 4,233,366 short tons. Most of the Missouri coals are either cannel or bituminous. Besides lead- zinc- iron and nickel-ores good copper-ores are abundant. cadmium exists in considerable quantities, some gold and silver have been obtained while marble, limestone, glass-sand, kaolin, fire-clay, barium sulphate, and other useful mineral substances exist plentifully.

Climate.—The position of the state in the far interior of the national domain gives it a climate of marked continental type, with accentuated summer temperatures and locally rigorous winters. At St. Louis, where the summer heat at times reaches 105°-110° the winter cold falls to -10° and even -20°. The state lies in the path of cyclonic storms. The mean annual rainfall ranges from 30 to 60 inches.

Agriculture.—Missouri affords every variety of soil from the fruitful corn lands of the Mississippi bottom the wide rolling prairies of the N. and the inexhaustibly productive loess of the NW. to the rocky and inarable hill sides seen in parts of the S. and the cold and refractory black clays occurring upon some belts of the coal field. Corn is the great staple of Missouri but winter wheat, barley, hay, oats, hemp, tobacco, fruit, sweet and true potatoes, market and dairy products, wool, wine, beef and pork are all produced in large excess over home demands. Sorghum and castor-oil beans are important crops and cotton is grown in the S. The leading agricultural crops in 1900 were corn 150,710,404 bushels, wheat, 18,840,713 bushels, oats 24,555,373 bushels, potatoes, 19,104,961 bushels and hay 2,765,010 tons. The commercial crop of cotton was in the same year 17,270 bales. Grazing and stock breeding are a leading farm interest and great numbers of cattle, horses, mules, etc., are forwarded hence to eastern and foreign markets. The official returns give Missouri a very respectable rank as regards the value of its lumber and forest products, yet it is largely supplied with lumber from the upper Lake States. The outlings of yellow pine amounted during eleven months of the year 1900 to 145,168,236 feet.

Manufactures.—Missouri, as the leading manufacturing state W. of the Mississippi River has large and varied industries, comprising the making of agricultural implements, boots and shoes, bridges, cars, carriages, drain tiles, door casings, chemicals, leather, lumber, cooperage, machinery, musical instruments, castor oil, lard oil, oleomargarine, paints, tobacco, snuff, spirits, wine, sugars, woollens, candles, soap, etc. The number of sugar and tobacco factories exceeds 600 while the annual product is over 70,000,000 sugars, a somewhat larger quantity of sugar, and nearly 70,000,000 pounds of cut and smoking tobacco. The tobacco industry ranks second in importance in the state. In 1904 there were in the state 83 fruit and grape distilleries, the product of which in fermented liquors was 2,401,268 barrels. In the brewing of malted liquors the state holds an important position. The product of oleomargarine in 1890 was 4,107,696 pounds. Slaughtering and pork packing are the most important interest of the state, the valuation of the product from this source in 1900 having been $43,040,885. The hogs packed and marketed in St. Louis and Kansas City in the year ending March 1, 1900 numbered 4,476,411.

Railroads.—In 1832, when the first railroad of Missouri was opened there were 38 miles of track. In 1854 179 miles in 1860 817 miles in 1870 2000 miles in 1880 9142 miles and in 1890 49422 miles. Several iron railroad bridges span the Mississippi and Missouri rivers and the roads connect with all important points in the W. S. and SW. as well as eastward. The steam navigation of the rivers is now quite subsidiary to the railroad business.

Education—There are state normal schools at Kirksville, Warrensburg, and Cape Girardeau, a training-school (Lancaster Institute) for colored teachers at Jefferson City and a state university at Columbia, to which is affiliated a normal college, and a school of mines at Rolla. There are two universities at St. Louis—Washington University (non-sectarian) and Saint Louis University (Roman Catholic)—and one at Canton, besides colleges at Cape Girardeau, Fayette, Fulton, Glasgow, Palmyra, Independence, Lillard, Liberty, St. Joseph, St. Louis, and Springfield, sons of them well end wed and embracing professional and other departments of instruction. There are several law medical and theological schools.

Counties, Cities, Government—The counties, including St. Louis city which was made independent in 1820 are 115 in number.—viz. Adair Andrew Atchison Audrain Barry Barton Bates Benton Bollinger Boone Buchanan Butler Caldwell Callaway, Camden Cape Girardeau Carroll Carter Cass Cedar Chariton Christian Clark Clay Clinton, Cole Cooper Crawford, Dade, Dallas, Davie, De Kalb, Dent Douglas Dunklin, Franklin Gasconade, Gentry Greene, Grundy, Harrison Henry Hickory, Holt, Howard, Howell, Iron, Jackson Jasper Jefferson, Johnson, Knox Lafayette Lawrence, Lewis, Lincoln Linn Livingston McDonald, Macou Madison, Marion, Mercer Miller Mississippi Missouri Monroe, Montgomery, Morgan, New Madrid, Newton, Andrew Oregon, Osage, Osceola, Pettis, Phelps Pike Platte Polk, Putnam, Ralls, Randolph Ray, Reynolds, Ripley, St. Charles, St. Clair, St. Francis, St. Genevieve, St. Louis, St. Louis city, Saline, Schuyler Scotland, Scott, Shannon Shelby, Toddard Stone, Sullivan Taney, Texas, Vernon Warren Washington Wayne, Webster Worth and Wright.

The principal cities are St. Louis, the metropolis on the Mississippi River (pop. in 1900 515,238) Kansas City (103,782) St. Joseph (102,000) Joplin (24,023) Springfield (23,267) Sedalia (15,231) Hannibal (12,780) Jefferson City the capital (10,645) Carthage (9,410) Moberly (8,012) Nevada (4,481) Chillicothe (3,945) and Independence (3,904).

The governor and state officers serve for a term of 4 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives the members of the former being elected for 4 years and those of the latter for 2 years. The state sends 16 representatives to the national Congress.

Population—The original white stock of Missouri was principally of French origin and the early English-speaking immigrants were principally from the northern tier of slave states. There is at present a large and thrifty German element in the population. Many thousands of people of the old Missouri stock migrated long since to the Pacific coast, and California and Nevada, and especially Oregon were very largely peopled by them. Pop. in 1810 29,435 in 1820 66,486 in 1830 140,145 in 1840 281,022 in 1850 532,044 in 1860 1,132,012 in 1870 1,212,295 in 1880 2,168,380 in 1890 2,000,184 in 1900 3,106,075. The negro population in 1900 numbered 181,334 the foreign-born 210,379.

History—The territory included in the present state of Missouri formed part of the French colony of Louisiana. Little was attempted in the way of settlement before the transfer of Louisiana to Spain in 1763. St. Louis was founded in 1764. The region came into the possession of the United States in 1803 having been purchased as part of the Louisiana province from France, to whom the province had been retroceded by Spain. It formed a part of Louisiana Territory until 1812 when it took the name of Missouri. The state of Missouri was admitted to the Union in 1821 after a protracted and exciting political struggle, growing out of the question of the extension of slavery which ended in the Missouri Compromise of 1820 by which the new state was permitted to retain slavery. That part of the former territory which was not made a portion of the state retained the name of Missouri Territory until 1854. It extended northward to British America and westward to the Rocky Mountains. The state did not receive its exact present limits until 1835. Missouri early monopolized the eco-inerative Santa Fé trade and became also the head-quarters of the hunters and trappers of the Far West. In the Kansas troubles which broke out in 1855 the citizens of the western border took an active part against the free-state movement. At the outbreak of the Civil War in 1861 the people of Missouri were divided with regard to secession but the Unionists finally prevailed. The state was the theatre of several active campaigns. A World's Fair was held in St. Louis in 1904 in commemoration of the Louisiana Purchase.

Mobile, a city port of entry and capital of Mobile Co. Ala. is situated on the W bank of the Mobile River at its entrance into the bay of the same name, 39 miles N of the Gulf of Mexico and 140 miles ENE. of New Orleans. Lat. 30° 42' N lon 88° W. It is the leading city of the state in commerce and occupies an important position in the cotton market of the United States. The site is a level sandy plain sufficiently elevated for convenient drainage being about 15 feet higher than the bay. The city is not compactly built, except the portion occupied by the commercial houses, and the abated streets of magnolia and live-oak together with the numerous gardens give it a pleasingly rural appearance. On the S and W sides of the city are dry sandy pine hills, which afford agreeable retreats during the hot season. The most prominent buildings are the Federal building, cotton exchange, court-house, marine hospital Southern Market, Odd Fellows' and Temperance Halls and the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception. Among the city's educational institutions are Barton Academy, the Medical College of Alabama, Academy of the Visitation, and St. Mary's School.

Mobile has an advantageous position for trade, being the natural outlet of one of the greatest cotton regions in the United States. Steamboats ply between this port and Montgomery on the Alabama River and Tuscaloosa on the Black Warrior. During winter and spring they ascend as high as Columbus on the Tombigbee River. Other steamers run to New Orleans via Lake Borgne and Pontchartrain. The city is on the direct route from the Gulf of Mexico to the great lakes and is approached by the Louisville and Nash ville, the Mobile and Ohio, and other railroads. The harbor has been greatly improved and now admits vessels drawing 23 feet of water. From 250,000 to 300,000 bales of cotton pass through the port of Mobile annually and there are also exported large quantities of lumber, staves, shingles, and naval stores. The export trade of the city is largely with the South American states, Cuba, and the British West Indies. The industrial establishments are represented by numerous cotton- and cotton-seed oil mills, foundries, flouring, lumber, sack and blind factories, and manufacturing of ships and boats, cordage, tobacco and cigars, bear cedar pencils, etc.

Mobile was founded by the French about 1719 (their settlement further V on the Mobile River having been removed hither). For a number of years it was the capital of their incipient colony of Louisiana. From 1763 to 1769 it belonged to England and then to Spain until 1813. In the latter year the forces of the United States took possession of it, but the place almost immediately fell into the hands of the English who relinquished it to the United States in the Treaty of Ghent, Dec. 1814. It was incorporated as a town in 1814 and a city charter was granted in 1819. In the Civil War the city held out against the Federals until April 1865 (See MOBILE BAY). Pop in 1880 29,258 in 1870 32,084 in 1890 29,132 in 1900 31,076 in 1900 38,469, of which about 13,000 were colored.

Mobile Bay, in the SW part of Alabama, extends from the Gulf of Mexico northward about 36 miles to the mouth of the Mobile River. It is bounded on the N. and E. by Russia (from which it is separated by the Pruth) on the S. by Wallachia on the W. by Transylvania, and on the NW by Bukovina. Area, 14,668 sq. m. Pop. in 1909 1,632,165. Except along the W. frontier the country is level forming part of the vast Rumanian plain, a great grain-producing and grazing region. Towards the W. the plains are succeeded by hills and valleys belonging to the realm of the Carpathians. Moldavia is traversed from N. to S. by the river Sereth an affluent of the Danube. The boundless pastures feed vast numbers of cattle, horses, sheep and goats. Swine are bred in the forests. Large game abounds in the region of the Carpathians. The Moldavians are Rumanians. The Jews form a considerable part of the urban inhabitants and the gypsies are a picturesque element in the population. The chief cities are Jassy formerly the capital of the principality of Moldavia, and Galatz. The Wallach (Ruman) principality of Moldavia arose towards the close of the Middle Ages. Its dominions were before very long extended over Bukovina and Bessarabia. To the W. the sister principality of Wallachia arose and struggled almost simultaneously into existence. First Wallachia and then Moldavia became tributary to the Turkish sultans who, however, for a long period did not actually bring the principalities within their grasp. In the course of the seventeenth century however, the autonomy of the two states was to a great extent extinguished. From the early part of the eighteenth century Moldavia and Wallachia were ruled by hospodars belonging to the Greek families known as Phanariotes. In the first half of the nineteenth century Russia sought to bring the Danubian Principalities under her control. The Crimean War (1854-56) had as one of its results the emancipation of Moldavia and Wallachia, whose union was consummated in 1859-61 a new state, Rumania, being formed. See RUMANIA.

Mongolia, a vast region of Asia, comprised in the Chinese Empire, mostly between lat 37 and 50 N and lon 88 and 120° E having Manchuria, from which it is in part separated by the Great Khingan Mountains on the E. China and Chinese Turkestan on the S and SW and Russian Asia, on the frontiers of which are the vast bulwarks of the Altai Khangai, Sayan and other mountains on the N. Area roughly estimated at 1,200,000 sq. m. In a broader interpretation the region of Drungaria in the NW is included in Mongolia. It is mostly a vast desert, lying at an elevation of from 2500 to 5500 feet. Its central part forming the E. half of the Gobi though here and there this stony and sandy region has productive tracts, feeding herds of cattle belonging to nomadic tribes, and some wheat, barley, and millet are raised. In the N. the country is richly wooded. Its rivers are mostly tributaries to the Amur (through the Argun) and Yenisei (Selenge) systems of water, though some discharge themselves into extensive lakes, which are most numerous in the NW the principal being the Uba-Kar and Uba-Aral-Nor (Kara-Uzun). The great bend of the Huang Ho is in the S. The trade is chiefly with China proper to which the Mongols send live-stock of all kinds, silk, soda, hides, and skins receiving in return brick tea, silk cotton and woolen fabrics, boots, metalware etc. A less important trade with Russia has recently developed. Among the numerous trade or caravan routes crossing the region is that from Peking to Maimashin and Hsichia. The Mongols are of the Buddhist religion and live under various chiefs, who pay tribute to the Chinese emperor. Mongolia is divided into numerous aimaks or chieftains these again into banner or military tribes, further subdivided into regiments etc. The supreme administration is vested in the colonial department at Peking. The chief city is Ulaan, in the N. The population is estimated at about 2,000,000 by some much higher. The Mongol constitution has been taken by ethnologists (in a classification now not generally accepted) as the type of one of the main divisions of mankind (the Yellow Race) comprising in a broad sense, the Chinese, Japanese, Koreans, Indo-Chinese, Tibetans, the Uralo-Altaic people (Tatars, Turks, Finns, Magyars) etc. to which some would add the Malayo Polynesian.

Montana, mōn-tā'ng, one of the northwestern states of the American Union bounded N by British Columbia, Alberta, and Assiniboia, E by North Dakota and South Dakota, S by Wyoming and Idaho, and W by Idaho. Its northern limit is 49° N lat. Its eastern, 104° W lon. Its southern is defined principally by the 45th degree of N lat., and its western line for the most part follows the crest of the Bitter Root Mountains and the main chain of the Rocky Mountains. Area of the land-surface, 145,210 sq m of the superlating waters 770 sq m.

The face of the country is gently rolling in the E with elevations of from 2000 to 3500 feet, and mountainous in the W. The main range of the Rocky Mountains enters the state from the N runs 260 miles in a SSE course, and then curves westward till it reaches the western line of the state at the junction of the Bitter Root Mountains with the parent chain. To the eastward are found the Little Rocky Little Bear Bear Paw Kayyon Powder River Gallatin and other mountain ranges. Through these the rivers often flow in deeply eroded and picturesque cañons. A number of the higher summits are crowned with perpetual snow. Mount Douglas, the highest elevation of the state, rises to 11,200 feet. Mount Delaney 10,300 ft. Many parts of the state have a remarkably rough surface, with peaks of basalt, tuff and other volcanic rock. Pine, cedar and fir trees clothe many of the mountain-sides and many of the river-bottoms have much cottonwood and other timber. Along the Three Forks of the Missouri and elsewhere in the state there is much gently undulating prairie of the finest agricultural capabilities.

Rivers—The Missouri River with its three head waters, —the Madison, Jefferson and Gallatin—has its source in this state. The Yellowstone, its largest tributary flows in this state throughout nearly its whole course. The Maria, Milk, Musselshell, Big Horn, Rosebud, Powder, Tongue, Sun, Stinking Water and Beaverhead rivers are tributary to the Missouri (which is navigated by steamboats as far as Fort Benton) directly or through the Yellowstone. The Yellowstone, with some of its branches, is also navigable in good stages of water. In the NW Clark's Fork of the Columbia issues from the large Flathead Lake. Some of the mountain-streams have an exceedingly rapid descent and being fed by mountain-snows their waters afford unflinching motive-power and unexcelled facilities for irrigation.

Geology and Minerals—The geological strata, especially in those districts which have been very greatly disturbed by volcanic action are much broken along the deep river cañons are exposed the strata of the greater part of the geological series. The Cretaceous formation occupies most of the state, but in the western mountainous region the Paleocene and Asio formations are well developed. The Carboniferous strata are thick and there are abundant and well-distributed lignitic coals of Cretaceous or Tertiary age. The coal output for the year 1903 was 1,488,810 short tons, valued at $2,440,848. In 1900 it was valued at nearly $7,000,000. But the great mineral wealth of Montana consists principally in its deposits of gold silver lead and copper. The production of copper is greater than that in any other state. The mineral product of 1899 was as follows: copper 245,003,314 pounds, valued at $40,941,906; silver 18,859,725 ounces having a commercial value of $10,180,000; gold 233,124 ounces, having a coinage value of $4,810,100 and lead 20,344,730 pounds valued at $900,410. In 1903 the copper product was 2,255,854 pounds; silver 12,642,306 fine ounces; gold (coinage value) $4,411,970.

Agricultural Resources, Climate—The prairie-lands, river bottoms bench-lands and many of the mountain valleys offer a wide extent of excellent wheat-land to the agriculturist. No other part of the United States offers greater advantages to the stock raiser and the wool grower than Montana, whose rich and nutritious bunch buffalo and grama grasses are eagerly fed upon by all the domestic grazing animals. Very little hay making or winter foddering is required and in the sheltered valleys horses, cattle, and sheep are allowed to range all winter without artificial protection. In unusually severe winters, however many animals perish. Much of eastern Montana appears to be too dry for successful general agriculture and in the mountains and valleys, although the rainfall (which for the entire state is only about 12 inches per annum) is often ample, irrigation has proved exceedingly advantageous. The winter climate is in general much milder than would be expected, considering the latitude and elevation of the state but there are occasionally seasons when the cold is intense and the mercury not rarely falls to -36° and even -46° F. But in the greater number of winters the cold is not excessive, being tempered by the warm and dry winds known as the chinooks, which sweep across the mountains storms are unfrequent. The summer heat frequently rises to 100°. The snowfall is never large, except on high mountain peaks. The leading agricultural crops in 1900 were wheat, 1,929,968 bushels; oats, 2,468,735 bushels, barley 201,527 bushels, potatoes, 640,654 bushels and hay, 390,658 tons. In sheep-farming and the yield of wool Montana leads all the other states. The quantity of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1900 was 26,026,120 pounds. The number of horned cattle in that year was 668,000 and of horses 330,000. Not many swine are reared in the state.

New Agricultural Industries—At present the tanning industries, in addition to stock raising and farming, are mining the smelting and refining of ores stamping and milling of quartz, lumbering and the manufacturing of flour. The water power of the state is abundant and not much interrupted by freezing or drought. In 1880 there were only 106 miles of railway in Montana, but in 1887 the number had increased to 1664 miles and in 1900 to 3023 miles.

Objects of Interest—A portion of the Yellowstone National Park at the head of the Yellowstone lies within the boundaries of this state. This region is celebrated for its wonderful geyser and other thermal and mineral springs, and for its generally striking scenery. Within this state are also the Great Falls of the Missouri.

Educational—The state university is located at Missoula. Other collegiate institutions are the State College of Agriculture and Mechanical Arts at Bozeman, the school of mines at Butte, the Montana Wesleyan University at Helena, and the College of Montana at Deer Lodge. There is a state normal college at Dillon.

Courtesies etc.—The state contains the following counties — viz. Beaverhead, Broadwater, Carbon, Cascade, Chouteau, Custer, Dawson, Deer Lodge, Fergus, Flathead, Gallatin, Granite, Jefferson, Lewis and Clark, Madison, Meagher, Mineral, Park, Ravalli, Blaine, Sweet Grass, Teton, Valley and Yellowstone. The state also contains the Crow Indian Reservation.

The principal towns are Helena, the capital (pop. in 1900 16,770); Butte (39,470); Great Falls (14,630); Anaconda (9453); Missoula and Bozeman.

Government—The governor and other state officers are elected for 4 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives. The members of the former are elected for 4 years and those of the latter for 2 years. The state has 1 representative in the national Congress.

Population—In 1890 the population was 20,595. In 1880 39,159. In 1890 132,189 and in 1900 243,339. The Indians on the different reservations represent the remnant of several once powerful tribes and nations, such as the Piegan, Crow, Flathead, Nez Percé (Kalispel), Kootenai, Flathead, Assiniboin, Gros Ventre, Sioux, and Cheyenne.

History—This region until well into the nineteenth century was frequented by as whites except the trapper the cowboy and the fur trader. Its eastern mountains were the abode of wild Indians, like the Crow and Blackfoot, while in the west dwelt the peaceable Flatheads (or Salish) with the Bananaks and other inoffensive tribes. In 1864 Montana was organized as a territory and within a few years the Northern Pacific R. route was surveyed across it. Gold had been discovered in this region as early as 1852, but it was not till many years later that the greater discoveries of the precious metals occurred. The wonderful mineral resources soon attracted a superior class of settlers. Montana was admitted to the Union as a state in 1889.

Montenegro, mon-tà-nè-gro (an Italian name meaning black mountain, which is also the signification of the Turk Kuradagh, kà-rà-dàğ, and of the Russian Чёрная гора, eger-nà-go-rà, a misnomer the name not being derived from the color of the mountains) a small independent country of Europe mainly between lat. 42° and 43° N. bounded on the NE by the Turkish sanjak of Scutari on the SE by Albania, on the SW by Dalmatia and on the W and N by Hungary. It borders for a short distance on the Adriatic Area, about 3600 sq m. The surface forms a series of elevated ridges of limestone rocks with lofty mountain peaks, one of which Durmitor in the N rises to a height of over 8000 feet. The features of the limestone formation known as the Karst are here present in a remarkable manner the rivers in places hollowing out their subterranean channels in which they disappear for long distances. The principal streams are the Maritsa and Zeta, whose united waters fall into the Lake of Scutari which is partly in Montenegro and partly in Albania. The lofty mountains in the north are clad with fine forests. The cultivation of the soil except in tiny patches is impracticable throughout the great part of this rocky little country. Cereals, tobacco and potatoes are raised the vine and the fig are cultivated and there are olive groves in the part nearest to the sea. The inhabitants tend numerous flocks of goats and sheep and there are considerable numbers of large cattle. Fish (from the Lake of Scutari and elsewhere) constitutes an important resource in the food supply of a part of the people and smoked fish are a prominent item in the limited exports of the country. There are rich deposits of iron. Communication is mainly by means of bridle paths but there are now some fine stretches of carriage road and a railroad is projected from the coast into the interior. The Montenegrins are a Slavic people on whom from the old Serb stock with an admixture of Albanian blood, and speak a Serb dialect. They are a well formed sturdy and brave mountain folk honest and moral in their sympathies and poverty. In religion they are Orthodox Christians their church being in a measure dependent upon the Russian Church. There are considerable numbers of Albanians and heretics the latter Mohammedans. The government is a nominal y. limited monarchy under a prince (Dopodul) there being a council of state partly elected by the people but in reality the monarch is bound to possess absolute power. The expenses of the military and educational establishments are partly met by the Russian government. The population of Montenegro is estimated at about 225,000. The capital is the little town of Cetinje. Other places of importance are Loga, Ruzica, Nikitch, Dubrovnik and Antivari.

The principality of Montenegro arose in the close of the Middle Ages as a fragment of the Serbian realm destroyed by the Turks. The Montenegrins in their almost inaccessible fastnesses offered a heroic resistance to the Turks and virtually maintained their independence through the centuries. From the early part of the sixteenth century down to the close of the seventeenth the country was ruled by an elective prince bishop (Vladika). Then for a century and a half the dignity of Vladika was held in hereditary succession by the dynasty of Petrovitch Negosh. In 1858 Danilo Petrovitch divorced the ecclesiastical from the secular supremacy proclaiming himself prince. Montenegro took up arms against Turkey in 1876 and after the close of the Russo-Turkish conflict (1877-78) received a large accession of territory.

Montréal, mōn-trē-awl (Fr. Montréal mōn-rā-lē) L. Mons Regis i.e. Mount Royal) a city and port of entry of the province of Quebec, Canada, the commercial metropolis of the Dominion of Canada, situated on the S. side of the Island of Montreal, in the St. Lawrence River (here over 2 miles wide) 180 miles (by water) SE of Quebec, and 420 miles N of New York. Lat of McGill Observatory 45° 39' 17" N lon. 73° 34' 38" W. It is at the head of deep-water navigation and has railway communication with the chief cities of Canada and the United States. The Island of Montreal is situated at the confluence of the Ottawa with the St. Lawrence. It is 32 miles long by about 16 miles broad at the widest part.

Montreal occupies a low tract of land about 2 miles wide between a beautiful elevation, called Mont Royal or Mount Royal (elevation 900 feet) and the river. The principal streets have large well built edifices, constructed chiefly of limestone quarried near the city. These buildings, combined with the effect of the lofty towers and spires, give Montreal an imposing appearance. Dominion Square is the finest square in the city and has at one corner the arch bishop's palace. Among the resident streets may be mentioned Sherbrooke Street. Montreal has numerous imposing and noted public edifices and institutions and many devoted to charitable purposes. Among the principal buildings are the city hall, court-house, post-office, custom-house, the building of the board of trade (1892-93) seminary of St. Sulpice, church of Notre Dame, general hospital Gray Nunnery (with upward of 500 professed sisters) Montreal College, McGill University, Academy of Music, Theatre Royal and other theatres, Victoria skating-rink, Protestant House of Industry and Refuge, Royal Victoria Hospital (opened in 1894) the Hôtel Dieu (a large hospital in which 3000 patients are annually treated) the Villa Maria Convent, Bonsecours Market art gallery etc. Among the educational institutions McGill University founded in 1821, holds first position. It has several faculties, and was attended in 1900-01 by 1111 students. It has associated with it the Redpath Museum of Natural History the Redpath Library the Royal Victoria College (for women) and other institutions. The Laval University (branch) was attended in 1901 by 605 students. Montreal has also a Society of Natural History a Mechanical Institute Canadian Institute, Fraser Institute etc. The suburb of Notre Dame is 250 feet long and 135 ft. broad, with two towers 227 ft. in height. In the NE tower is a fine obelisk of hells, and in the SW is a bell weighing 29,400 pounds, the heaviest bell in America. Christchurch cathedral (Episcopal), a very fine example of Gothic architecture is built of Montreal limestone. A magnificent pile is the Roman Catholic Bishop's Church the Cathedral of St. James (better known as St. Peter's Cathedral) founded in 1808, which measures 333 ft. in length, and is surmounted by a dome 250 ft. in height.

The harbor of Montreal which is deep enough for the largest vessels, and the Lachine Canal present for several miles a succession of masonry quays and wharves. The canals which have their outlet at this point afford, with the natural waters, uninterrupted navigation from the Strait of Belle Isle to Port Arthur at the head of Lake Superior or over a distance of 2200 miles. The river is here crossed by the Victoria Jubilee Bridge, constructed in 1898-99 at a cost of $50,000,000 and which replaces the more famous Victoria Tubular Bridge, built in 1854-56 at a cost of $5,300,000. The city is entered by the Grand Trunk the Canadian Pacific the Intercolonial, and the New York Central and Hudson River R.R.

Among its manufactures are iron foundries, distilleries, breweries, sugar refineries, soap and candle-works, and manufactories of hardware, carriages and sleighs, woodenware, glass paints and drug edge-tools locomotives steam-engines boilers, general machinery tanneries rubber goods printing presses, agricultural implements musical instruments, paper rope, sewing-machines, types, pins, tobacco, woolen and cotton goods, boots and shoes clothing etc. The city has large saw and flouring-mills, rolling mills, lead-works, brass-foundries, and many other industrial establishments.

The climate in summer is hot, often reaching 90° in the shade, and the winters are severe, the temperature ranging very often from zero to 10° and even 30° below it. The mean annual temperature is 42°. Pop in 1844, 44,003; in 1851, 57,775; in 1861, 90,323; in 1871, 107,225; in 1881 (area increased) 155,237; in 1891 216,650; in 1901 287,730—composed chiefly of French Canadians, English, Irish and Scotch the inhabitants of French extraction constituting more than one-half of the entire population.

In 1535 Jacques Cartier landed here and found an Indian village called Hochelaga. Cartier named the place Mont Royal. In 1642 the French laid out a city which was named Ville Marie de Montréal. In 1700 the place was taken by the English.

the Carpathians NW the highlands of the Moravian Plateau and on the NE the Sudetic Mountains. It belongs almost entirely to the basin of the Danube, to which most of its waters are conveyed by the March or Morava, except in the E. where the Oder rises. Moravia produces cereals abundantly. Large quantities of flax and of beets (for sugar) are raised, and fruit is plentiful. Much wine is made. Live-stock of all kinds is numerous. The principal mineral products are iron, coal, graphite, etc. Moravia holds an important place in the manufacture of textiles, especially of woollens. The best-sugar industry is on a large scale. Beer, brandy and alcohol are produced in large quantities. The iron and steel industry is represented and the government tobacco-factories employ many thousand hands. The government of the province is under a governor and a diet consisting of the archbishop of Olmütz, the bishop of Brunn and deputies from the landed gentry, the towns, industrial centres, rural communes and chambers of commerce and trades. At the close of the ninth century soon after the introduction of Christianity into the region, a powerful Moravian realm arose embracing (in addition to the present province) Bohemia and other territories. This state soon fell as a result of the Hungarian invasion. From the eleventh century Moravia was generally more or less closely united with Bohemia. For a time it had its own manufactures, who held the country as a fief of the Bohemian crown. The rule of the house of Austria dates from 1526. Pop. in 1900 2,437,000 of whom 71 per cent were Slavs (Czechs, Moravians, Slovaks) and the bulk of the remainder Germans. About 95 per cent of the people are Roman Catholics. The capital is Brunn.

Morocco (Arab. Magreb el-Akhs ma-geb' el ak-ah), —a. The Extreme West.) a sultanate or empire in the NW part of Africa, bounded W by the Atlantic Ocean N by the Mediterranean Sea E by Algeria and S by the Sahara (or Great Desert). Most of its area within defined limits is included between the parallels of 28° and 36° N latitude and the meridians of 1° and 11° W longitude.

The Saharan frontier is still largely unsettled. The area is roughly placed at about 300,000 sq. mi. The country is traversed diagonally from NE to SW throughout its whole extent by the chain of the Atlas Mountains on the NW side of which lie the old kingdoms of Fez and Morocco and on the opposite side the territories or minor kingdoms of Tadilat, Draa, El Harah, Adrar Gersah, S. of Adna, and Fez el-Akhs (that is, the extreme or farthest limit).

Relief of the Land.—Physically considered Morocco may be divided into four regions. 1. The great range of the Atlas, composed of several more or less parallel chains, which send their ramifications throughout the greater portion of the country even into the peninsular projection of Tangier and are in their main divisions conveniently divided into the Southern (or Anti Atlas), the High Atlas and the Central Atlas. The loftiest or better known summits are the Jebel-Mulain, Tui-Tamjurt (both SE of the city of Morocco), Tizi Likhump, and Jebel-Ayashin, all of which exceed 11,000 feet in elevation and two, perhaps, 14,000 ft. 2. El Rif or the northern maritime district comprising the chain of mountains which rise at no great distance from the Mediterranean Sea (Outer Atlas). 3. The wide belt of fertile plain intermixed with hill and valley which lies between the two preceding ranges and extends from the Mulwiya (Muluya) River to Mogador a distance of 450 miles. 4. The plains and valleys SE of the Atlas. These last all terminate in or adjoin the Great Desert. The summits of the Atlas often rise into peaks but their scenery is characterized rather by rounded heights clothed with luxuriant forests than by rugged and precipitous forms. The higher elevations are covered with snow during many months of the year and they appear to carry signs of ancient glaciation. There are no modern glaciers. See ATLAS MOUNTAINS.

In the extreme N. near Ceuta, the Jebel Musa (Mountains of Musa) rises the rock of Gibraltar with an elevation of about 2700 feet. The two are parts of the same mountain-chain served in the comparatively modern period of the formation of the Strait of Gibraltar.

Rivers.—Morocco has the largest rivers in northern Africa W of Egypt. Those flowing from the N side of the Atlas have their channels well filled with water but those flowing from the S are dry in summer. The Muluya, or Mulwiya, rising in a knot of the Atlas, about lat. 32° 30' N flows NE. to the Mediterranean with a course of some 350 miles. The Sebou descends from Mount Biliou westward to the Atlantic, in a course of 160 miles. The Un or Rebnah (or Morbaya) which enters the sea at Asamor lat. 33° 17' N has a course of about 230 miles and the Tensift, which passes near the city of Morocco has a length of about 100 miles. Of the rivers which discharge their waters into the desert, the Gurr (Ghir or Ghir) the most easterly seems to have a course SSE, occasionally traceable for 300 or 400 miles. The Ziz, which with its numerous affluents waters a very fertile and populous country, is spent before it attains half that length. The Draa (or Darra) rising in the central and most elevated portion of the Atlas first flows S for nearly 250 miles, forms a lake called Ed Delays, and then, turning W, enters the ocean about lat. 28° 15' N, after a course estimated to be 700 miles the lower portion of its bed however and the lake are periodically dry. The bed of the Draa is by many geographers assumed to be the southern boundary of the empire. The coast, being generally low and little broken, offers few good harbors. Of these Tangier and Mogador are the best the rest, as El-Arrouch (or Larache) Salee Rabat, Maragan, Asamor etc. are but open roadsteads, mostly at the mouths of rivers.

Minerals.—Little is as yet known of the mineral resources of the country, but they would appear not to be very important, some rich ores (copper iron lead, antimony), however occurring in the mountains but remaining practically unworked. Amethysts of great size and beauty have been found in the mountains.

Climate Vegetation, Agriculture, etc.—The climate is generally fine and on the whole salubrious for Europeans. Towards the seaboard the extremes of temperature lie with in moderate limits and the general temperature as at Mogador and Tangier is kept between 60° in the coldest month and 70°-85° in the hottest month (August). The extremes are much more accentuated in the interior where the nights are frequently disagreeably cold and the days intensely hot. In the city of Morocco the thermometer has been observed to mark 118°. The rainfall varies considerably according to the region. The flora of Morocco is essentially of the Mediterranean type. The forests of the coast mountains contain among other species of oak, that which yields cork. In the higher regions of the Atlas are found the Aleppo pine, the cedar of Lebanon and many varieties of oxycedrus and of juniper yielding fragrant gums. The date-palm and the dwarf palm form extensive woods E and S of the Atlas. In the maritime region grows the Elaeagnus argentea from the olive-like fruit of which is extracted an excellent oil. Among the wild plants of the southern provinces may be mentioned the asper and archil the latter an important article of commerce.

The agriculture of Morocco is still in a primitive condition although large crops are frequently produced. The cereal crops are wheat, barley, maize, and durrah (or millet). The last constitutes the chief support of the population though beans, the sweet bean and canary-seed are consumed in large quantities by the poorer classes. The vine is cultivated near the towns for the sake of the fresh grapes and raisins. Most of the fruits of southern Europe and the Canary Islands are to be found here in sufficient abundance. The date is an important resource. A large portion of the population leads a pastoral life. The wealth of the Arab tribes consists chiefly in their herds and flocks. Horses of an excellent breed are numerous and still more important are the sheep the wool of which is frequently of the finest possible description.

Animal Life.—The lion still haunts the plains on the sides of the Atlas, where the leopard is also met with. The wild boar inhabits the forests. Gazelles and several species of large antelope enter the country from the desert. More formidable than beasts of prey are the locusts which come from the desert in countless multitudes, spreading desolation over the fields. The ostrich is found on the S frontiers and the ostrich feathers brought from that quarter are the best known in commerce.

Industries Commerce.—The industries of the land are few and are in the main represented by the manufacture of cloth, caps, leather, carpets, pots, silk stuffs, ornaments in gold, silver, copper and brass, and jewelry. Fez makes and exports great quantities of the fez cap. The tanners of Mequinez, Fez, and Tadilat have a high reputation. The Moroccan carpets called by the Moors Sherbink and Ayatah, and much esteemed in Europe largely under the name of Turkey carpets, come in great part from Rabat. The Jews alone do business as goldsmiths and jewellers. Morocco has considerable commerce with the East, much of which is carried on by caravan service. It also has an extended caravan trade with the Sudan across the Sahara, Thuktu being an important mart for the sale of salt, woollen mantles, saffers, daggers, tobacco looking-glasses, etc., for which ivory horns, incense, ostrich feathers, gold-dust, gums indig, casamom, malingbetta pepper and other articles are received in exchange.

The population of Morocco is variously estimated the data presenting wide discrepancies. According to an estimate made in 1904 by the German statistician Supan based upon the figures presented in the recent work of the Blasques de Segouane, it would be in the neighborhood of 7,900,000. The inhabitants are divided into several distinct races the Berbers and Arabs constituting the great bulk of the population. The Berbers who represent the ancient inhabitants of the country are divided into Aunsiys and Shillahs the latter of whom inhabiting the high plains of the Atlas, devote themselves to agriculture. The Arabs, who together with the Moors, probably constitute about one-half of the total population form the bulk of the rural inhabitants in the plains. In the towns along the coast are found the Moors. The Moors are a mixed race representing an admixture of the blood of the Arabs, who conquered the country 1200 years ago with that of the Hamitic Berbers and other ancient inhabitants, descendants in part of the Mauri (whence the name Moors). They speak an Arabic dialect and are Mohammedans. There are many negroes. A considerable number of Jews are to be found in all the commercial towns. The Europeans number about 4000-5000. The education given at the schools in the chief towns and completed at the university of Fez does not go beyond the theology of the Koran.

The overlord or sultan of Morocco styled by Europeans emperor bears the title of Emir el Muminin or 'Lord of the true Believers'. His power is absolute. He has a cabinet, or council of state, of the head of which is a grand vizier. He is the spiritual as well as the temporal head of the state. The law is administered according to the teachings of the Koran. There are two cities which are the Sultan's residence,—Fez (which is the chief capital) and Morocco. These are both situated in the interior. Another large inland city is Mequinez. The most important maritime town is Tangier. Other busy seaports are Casablanca (Dar-el-Baida), Massagan, El Arach, Rabat, Safi, Mogador and Tetuan.

History.—Morocco corresponds nearly to the Mauritania Tingitana of the Romans peopled by the Mauri (or Mauri). The Roman dominion lasted from the first century A.D. until the early part of the fifth century A.D. when it was extinguished by the Vandals whose African kingdom after an existence of a hundred years, was overthrown by the Byzantines. At the beginning of the eighth century the Saracens (Arabs) had made themselves masters of the whole of northern Africa, whence, in 711 they crossed over into Spain which they conquered. Among the dynasties that arose in what is now Morocco in the course of the Middle Ages were the Edrisides the Almoravides (who founded the city of Morocco in the second half of the eleventh century and established their sway over Mohammedan Spain, the Almohades (who, in the twelfth century supplanted the Almoravides in Morocco and Spain) and the Merinides. In the latter part of the Middle Ages Morocco was a great seat of Mohammedan learning. The expulsion of the Jews from Spain, and later of the Moriscos added a large and intelligent element to the population of Morocco. From the middle of the sixteenth century the chief power was in the hands of the Sherifs of Teflet, under whom the dominions of Morocco were extended eastward and southward. In the second half of the seventeenth century a side branch of the Sherifs came into possession of the throne. This dynasty has continued to rule until the present day.

Morocco (Arab. Ma al-akh) one of the capitals of the sultanate or empire of Morocco situated on an elevated plain on the NW slope of the Atlas Mountains about 99 miles from the Atlantic Ocean and 4 miles from the left bank of the river Tensift, which is crossed by an old stone bridge of over 30 arches. Morocco as approached from a distance, in its environment of palm groves and smiling gardens, presents an attractive aspect, but seen from within it has to a great extent the appearance of a city in ruins. It is surrounded by a lofty dilapidated wall, with towers at frequent intervals and with a number of huge gates. Much of the enclosed area consists of gardens and open spaces. The streets are narrow and crooked and lined with mean, low houses. The most prominent object is a lofty tower of the Kutubia mosque. The imperial residence embraces a vast area, consisting of an agglomeration of houses, mosques, gardens, lanes, and open places. Near it is the Jewish quarter (El-Millah) which is surrounded by a wall. The population of Morocco is estimated at about 60,000. About one-seventh of this number are Jews, who carry on most of the trade of the place. In former times the town was industrially important through its manufactures of morocco leather. Morocco was founded in the second half of the eleventh century by the sect of the Almoravides and rose to be one of the most populous cities of Islam famous as a seat of learning. Centuries of decline have left nothing of its former splendor.

Moscow, mo'skō (Russ. Moskva, mosk-vā L. Mosqua Fr. Moscou, mos-koo Ger. Moskau, mos-kāv) a city of Russia, capital of the government of Moscow and formerly of the Russian empire, situated on the Moskva, 408 miles SE. of St. Petersburg. Lat. of observatory 35° 45' 19" N. lon. 37° 34' 18" E. Although superseded 200 years ago by St. Petersburg as the political centre of Russia, Moscow has remained in a way the focus of the Russian people, venerated as the great centre about which the most sacred traditions of the nation cluster and as the coronation city of the czar. It is here that the national life of Russia may be said to pulsate (the popular saying being that St. Petersburg is the brain and Moscow the heart of Russia) while commercially and industrially Moscow is the leading city in the empire. Its population it is not greatly inferior to St. Petersburg. Moscow with its hundreds of churches, whose cupolas and walls are resplendent with gold and varied hues, with its venerable monasteries encircled with walls and towers and with its stately modern edifices, contrasting with the diminutive dwellings of its humbler classes, presents a strikingly picturesque appearance. The city is built on and between several eminences. The Moskva pursues a tortuous course through it and is joined near the centre of the city by a little stream called the Yauza. The nucleus about which Moscow has grown up is the famous Kremlin the holy place of the Russians, which rises like a citadel in the middle of the city on the left bank of the Moskva. Adjoining the Kremlin on the E. is the Kitai Gorod (a name commonly rendered by Chinese City), the main business quarter closely and irregularly built. This constitutes with the Kremlin the inner city or the City (Gorod). The Kitai Gorod is shut off from the rest of Moscow by an ancient massive and lofty whitewashed wall with numerous towers and turrets, gleaming with bright colors. About the Gorod extends, fan-like, the so-called White City (Belyi Gorod) bounded by a great belt of boulevards. This is the most elegant quarter of Moscow built in modern style, with fine public buildings, palaces, and handsome shops. Beyond the White City extending in a broad zone is the section known as the Earth City (Zemlynoi Gorod) so called from the enclosing earthen wall of the seventeenth century on whose site is a belt of boulevards stretching for a distance of about 9 miles, and bearing in part the name of Garden Street (Sadovaya). Beyond the Earth City come the faubourgs, greatly exceeding in area all the rest of Moscow. These outlying sections are mainly the abode of the laboring classes. Here are numerous factories and extensive railway yards. Outside of the business sections and the quarters of the wealthier classes, Moscow contains in great part dwellings of one or two stories.

The Kremlin with its lofty uncompassing walls and towers its imposing gateways, and its churches soaring aloft with their clusters of gilded cupolas presents a spectacle unique among the architectural displays of the world. It occupies a hill rising steeply from the banks of the Moskva to a height of about 125 feet, and is roughly triangular in form. The wall is over a mile in circuit and about 55 ft. high, and is surmounted by 21 towers. There are 5 gateways leading into the sacred precincts. From the Red Square, which is between the Kremlin and the Kitai-Gorod, the gate of the Redeemer and the Nicholas gate, both of them monumental structures, conduct into the Kremlin. The former, which is 200 ft. high leads to the Square of the Czar. To the NW of this is a great group of structures consisting of the convent of the Ascension, the Little Palace and the Ichudoi monastery (Monks' monastery) called the Monastery of Weavers formerly the residence of the metropolitan of Moscow. In the southeast of the Ascension (a convent for women) is a cathedral with 5 gilded cupolas the burial place of many Russian princes. At the SW end of the Square of the Czar towers the remarkable Ivan the Great belfry about 40 ft. high, containing about 30 bells, the largest of which is supposed to weigh 70 tons. In this huge bell tower is the treasure of the patriarchs of Moscow. At the foot of the belfry on a granite pedestal stands the famous great bell of Moscow (the Bell of the Czar), the largest casting of its kind in the world. It is about 36 ft. high and weighs over 200 tons. It was cast in 1735 and has never been surmounted. To the SW of the Square of the Czar is the Cathedral Square. Here are the cathedrals of the Ascension of the Assumption and of the Archangel Michael. The first-named (the Uspensky) standing near the centre of the Kremlin dates from the fifteenth century and was designed by an Italian architect. This is the coronation church. It has a great dome and cupolas at the corners. The cathedral of the Archangel Michael likewise designed by an Italian, contains the tomb of the czar down to Peter the Great. The cathedral of the Assumption, which is the Imperial church of the czar, has 9 cupolas and a gilded roof. To the SW of the Cathedral Square is the mass of buildings constituting the Great Palace comprising several palaces and churches, and containing magnificent apartments. In one part of it, detached from the main structure is the treasure-chamber containing in its various halls an extraordinary collection of regalia of priceless value and products of the gold and silver-smiths art of different nations, weapons, glass ware, and miscellaneous curiosities. To the N of the Great Palace is the building of the Holy Synod in which are the church of the Twelve Apostles and the library of the synod (formerly the library of the patriarchs) containing rare treasures in Greek and Slavonic manuscripts. Adjoining this edifice are the Kremlin barracks at one corner of which is the great Czar Cannon. The N end of the Kremlin is occupied by the vast arsenal and the Palace of Justice (formerly the building of the senate).

Adjoining the N end of the Kremlin is the handsome building of the Historical Museum. Close by is the Kamennaya Chertva. These two edifices are at the NW end of the Red Square. At the opposite end is the cathedral of St. Basil which, with its many cupolas and towers in manifold shapes and hues is the most striking edifice of Moscow. On the side of the Red Square opposite the Kremlin and extending farther towards the Moskva are vast ranges of buildings the so-called Commercial Blocks recently erected, with their great glass-covered arcades. In the streets the central thoroughfares of the Kitai-Gorod, hued with wholesale business surround the handsome exchange. To the W of the Kremlin are the Alexander Gardens. A little farther to the W are the extensive buildings of the university of Moscow the edifice containing the principal archives of the foreign office and the Rumyantsev Museum a fine Renaissance building. Near by is the new Alexander III Museum of Fine Arts. A short distance to the S on the bank of the Moskva, stands the splendid modern church of the Redeemer with its 5 gilded cupolas the largest having a diameter of about 100 feet. This is the finest of the churches of Moscow.

From the N end of the Kremlin extends the Tverskaya Ulitsa (Tver Street) is a NW direction with its many beautiful shops. On it is the palace of the governor-general. About 1/2 of a mile N of the Kremlin is the large Theatre Square adorned with a monumental fountain. Here are the imperial Great Theatre, a sumptuous edifice, and the imperial Little Theatre. From the square the Petrovka, a fine and animated business thoroughfare, runs northward. About 1/2 of a mile to the E of the Theatre Square is the Lubyanskaya Square flanked on the E side by the building of the Conservatory. In the NE corner of Moscow is the beautiful Sakharin Park, the principal pleasure-ground of the people of Moscow with its countless diminutive summer-dwellings. Among the many monastic establishments of Moscow in addition to those already mentioned, are the historically interesting convent of the Virgin, in the SW corner of the city the Donskoy monastery, within whose great encompassing walls, painted red are 7 churches the Vozneseniye-Petrovsky monastery, dating from the fourteenth century; and the Simonovskiy monastery. The city has a number of fine public monuments, such as the triumphal arch in commemoration of the year 1812, the Pushkin monument, and the monument erected to the memory of the patriots Muzin and Pashkevich.

At the head of the educational institutions of Moscow is the university founded in 1755 with about 4500 students. Its library contains 300 000 volumes. Among other institutions are the Polytechnic Institute, the Imperial School of Engineering the Agricultural Academy the Imperial Lyceum the Imperial Academy of Oriental Languages, and the ecclesiastical academy. Among the public collections are the Rumyantsev Museum, containing a vast library and valuable ethnological collections the Natural History Museum with a library of 150 000 volumes the Historical Museum the Museum of Art Industries and the Tretyakov Gallery containing the largest collection of the works of modern Russian painters. Moscow is the seat of the Imperial Society of Naturalists and many other learned societies. About 100 newspapers are published in the city. The Imperial Foundling Hospital is the largest institution of its kind in the world.

The manufacturing industries of Moscow are on a vast scale. The textile industry is the most important cotton silk and woollen fabrics being all produced in immense quantities. The manufacture of artificial waxes and machinery comes next in importance. Light clothing shoes and carriages are extensively manufactured and among other important industries are tanning the preparation of food products and the making of wooden articles. The city is one of the leading commercial centres of Europe. It is the principal tea-distributing centre of the continent. The population of Moscow in 1812 was estimated at 250 000 in 1864 it was 384 000 in 1874 480 000 in 1903 1 991 79 (inclusive of suburbs 1 174 427). The average temperature of the month of January is 12° of July 66°.

Moscow rose to importance about the close of the thirteenth century. It became the chief seat of sovereignty in Russia in 1325, superseding Vladimir. About two centuries later its sway was extended over the whole of the Russian dominions the Muscovites remain becoming synonymous with Russia. The most important event in the modern history of Moscow is the entry of Napoleon and his army into the city and its burning by the Russians Sept. 1812.

Nanking, ná-má-king or Nankin (the Southern Capital as distinguished from Peking the Northern Capital) called also Kiang-ming, a city of China, capital of the province of Kiang-si and anciently of southern China, situated on the right bank of the Yang-tse-kiang, 130 miles (direct) from its mouth and about 580 miles SSE. of Peking. Lat. 32° 2' N. lon 118° 49' E. Its ancient walls can be traced over a distance of many miles, but the modern walls are of much less extent. The part of the city occupied by the Manchus is separated by a wall from the Chinese town. The most remarkable structure in Nanking was formerly the Porcelain Tower built in the early part of the fifteenth century and destroyed by the Tai-ping rebels during whose occupation the city suffered much. This magnificent and fantastic edifice, said to have been erected at a fabulous cost, was of an octagonal form 261 feet high and had 9 stories. Among notable objects may be mentioned the tomb of the king, supposed to be of the Ming dynasty with gigantic armed figures on the eaves leading to it, the government palace, a marine school, royal printing house, arsenal, and observatory. Nanking has many factories of crapes, satin, paper, artificial flowers, cannon and other materials of war and China (or Indian) ink and gives its name to the well known Nankin cotton cloth which is also made throughout the whole province. Nanking has recently been made a treaty port, but it has little foreign commerce. By the Grand Canal which crosses the Yang-tse-kiang about 50 miles to the E. it communicates directly with Peking. Nanking is the residence of a viceroy with authority over the provinces of Kiang-si, Kiang-su, and Ngan-hwei and is a great military depot. It is the chief seat of literature in the empire. The treaty between China and the British, which terminated the Opium War was signed at Nanking in Aug. 1842. In 1853 the Tai-ping attacked Nanking, took it, and made it their capital. It was captured by the Imperials in 1864. Pop. estimated at 254,000.

Naples, ná-pis (It. Napoli ná-po-la, and. Napoli ná-pis) the most populous city of Italy capital of the province of Naples and formerly the capital of the kingdom of Naples, situated on the N. side of the Bay of Naples, at the foot of Mount Vesuvius, 118 miles SE. of Rome. Lat. of observatory 40° 51' 8" N. lon 14° 15' 5" E. The mean temperature of the year is 51° Fahr. winter 47° 5" summer 76° 1". The extreme range is between about 26° (January) and 104° snow occasionally lying on the ground. The city is beautifully situated on the curving shores of the large and picturesque bay to which it gives its name. It extends partly along the shore and partly amphitheatrically up the acclivity of the adjacent hills, being bounded on the W. by the picturesque height of Posillipo. On the E. rise the lofty tops of Vesuvius and Somma. The charms of the surrounding country are enhanced by the numerous villas and other objects with which art has embellished it. The city is divided into two very unequal sections by the heights and connecting ridges of the Capodimonte (crowned by the royal Palazzo di Capodimonte) and Sant' Elmo (with the old Castello Sant' Elmo, now used as a prison) and Pizzafalcone, at whose extremity projecting into the sea, is the Castello dell'Ovo, near which is the swarming quarter of Santa Lucia. Eastward and southeastward of this line of heights to the major part of the city the old quarters and the business centre, which has been largely reconstructed since 1884. Westward of this section is the smaller Naples in which are located the greater number of the hotels and the beautiful pleasure ground known as the Villa Pausanias, containing the famous aquarium and zoological station, the most perfectly organized institutions of their kind in the world.

The modern streets of Naples are regular, clean and well paved with square blocks of lava, but the older ones are for the most part inconveniently narrow. Some of the most congested sections have recently been reconstructed through government activity with great gain to public health and morals. Vast sums have also been expended by the city and state on a great system of sewerage, and extensive new quarters have sprung up to accommodate the overflowing population. The houses are large, substantial, and lofty averaging not less than five or six stories, with flat roofs, to which the inmates often resort. The street which forms the chief thoroughfare is the Via Roma formerly known as the Toledo, which traverses the principal portion of the city from N. to S. Among the other great thoroughfares are the Strada del Duomo and the Corso Garibaldi, both abutting on the Strada Nuova, near the harbor. The Corso Vittorio Emanuele is a long, tortuous street in the western part of the city winding along the slopes of Sant' Elmo, and affording magnificent views. There are numerous squares, among the principal being the Piazza del Plebiscito, on which are the royal palace and the church of San Francesco di Paola, the Piazza del Municipio with the handsome town-hall and the Piazza del Mercato or market-place. The most prominent of the newer thoroughfares is the Corso Umberto Primo, which was constructed in 1888-94 through the most densely populated portion of the city and the Galleria Umberto Primo built after the style of the famous Victor Emmanuel arcade in Milan and measuring 160 yards in greatest length. Westward from the Castello dell'Ovo (castle of the egg so named from its oval form) stretches the corring strand (Spiaggia). Here is the celebrated Riviera di Chiaia, lined with stately edifices, the fashionable promenade of Naples. Between it and the shore is the Villa Nazionale, in front of which is a splendid quay the Via Caracciolo.

Among the buildings most deserving of notice are the cathedral a large Gothic building begun in 1212 and dedicated to St. Januario for the preservation of whose relics a magnificent chapel was built at the beginning of the seventeenth century, the church of Santi Apostoli the church of San Paolo Maggiore, internally faced with marble the churches of Santa Maria del Porto (Chiesa del Annunziata) San Domenico Maggiore the Annunziata, San Fevere San Filippo Neri and other churches, to the number of 400 several of them of architectural merit and almost all of them richly decorated. Among the buildings devoted to secular purposes are the Palazzo Reale, or royal palace an immense pile measuring 185 yards in length richly fitted up and adorned with paintings, the Palazzo di Capodimonte, already referred to commanding magnificent views, and adorned with fine sculptures, paintings and articles of art, the Old Palace and the Museo Nazionale, erected in 1586 as cavalry barracks, made over to the university in 1615 but afterwards converted into a great national museum unrivalled in its collection of antiquities consisting of gems, bronzes, vases, etc. chiefly obtained from Pompeii and Herculaneum. The Museo contains the famous Pompeian frescoes, a general gallery of sculptures, collection of engravings the Herculaneum papyri a picture-gallery with masterpieces of Italian and Spanish art the royal library with nearly 400,000 volumes, etc. There are numerous theatres, of which that of San Carlo (founded in 1737) is remarkable for its magnificence and is one of the largest opera-houses in the kingdom. Among the interesting ruins of the city a part, in addition to the buildings already mentioned are the Porta Capuana (one of the old gates) the Castello Nuovo S. of the Piazza del Municipio, and among the military harbor and several palaces. The city is embellished with fountains and sculptural monuments. Naples is the seat of an archbishop. At the head of the institutions of learning is the university founded in 1224 which has an attendance of more than 5000 students. The city possesses a royal school of engineers veterinary college, military school royal institute for oriental studies, various medical schools, more or less in association with the university and schools of design music, etc. Among the literary and scientific institutions are a society of arts, sciences and antiquities (Royal Society) an observatory a botanical garden one of the richest in Italy the zoological station already noticed an agricultural society physical chemical, and mineralogical cabinets and several public libraries.

The benevolent endowments include several large hospitals, among which may be named the hospital for incurables and the Annunziata, the latter partly for foundlings. The Beclaria (or Albergo dei Poveri) an orphan asylum or house of refuge, on a very extensive scale and a Monte di Pietà or public loan establishment. An aqueduct, completed in 1885 supplies the city with excellent water. Street railways traverse the city and extend into the country in all directions.

The manufactures of Naples include a great variety of articles. Among those of leading importance are macaroni and vermicelli constituting the principal food of the great body of the people. Other leading articles are silk, cotton and woolen goods and other textiles, fire-arms, porcelain, majolica-wares, articles in terra-cotta, tobacco, chemical products, perfumes, lace, gloves, soap, carriages, violins and other musical instruments, hats, boots and shoes, etc. There are also extensive machinery plants, large ship-building works, foundries, blast-furnaces, glass-works, and type-foundries. Naples is the second seaport of Italy. Genoa ranking first. About 6000 steamers and sailing vessels enter the port annually. There is steam communication with America, Asia, Africa, and Australia. A great portion of the Italian emigration sails from this port. Several long motor projects into the bay.

Naples (Nepolis, — i. e., the New City) was founded as a colony of the Greek city of Cumæ (in Campania) by the rule of an older colony called Parthenope which came to be known as Paleopolis (i. e. the Old City). The Romans established their dominion here at the beginning of the third century A.C. Under the Romans Neapolis flourished, retaining the character of a Greek city. It was a luxurious retreat for the wealthy Romans. After the fall of the Roman Empire Naples was for a short time under the rule of the Ostrogoths, from whom it was wrested by the Greeks (Byzantines) about the middle of the sixth century. It became the capital of a Greek dukedom which existed for several centuries. This dukedom was swallowed up in the course of the eleventh and twelfth centuries by the Norman conquerors of southern Italy and Sicily. The city was afterwards the capital of the kingdom of Naples and of the realm of the Two Sicilies. The kingdom of Naples comprised all Italy S. of the Papal States (See SICILY, THE TWO). Among the numerous objects of interest in the vicinity are Vesuvius, Pompeii, Herculaneum, the Phlegrean Fields, Baia (Bææ), Pozzuoli, Capri and Ischia at the entrance to the bay. Pop. in 1901 563,340. Inclusive of suburbs about 700,000.

Nebraska, a river of North America. See PLATTE.

Nebraska, a northwest-central state of the American Union bounded N. by South Dakota, E. by Iowa and Missouri, S. by Kansas and Colorado, and W. by Colorado and Wyoming. Area, 76,846 sq. m. Its N. line is formed by the 43d parallel of N. lat. and the Missouri River which stream also washes its whole eastern border. The southern line strikes westward along the parallel of 40° N. to the meridian of 102° W. lon. and beyond that follows the parallel of 41° N. lat. to the meridian of 104° W. lon. which is the western limit of the state.

Face of the Country—The greater part of Nebraska is gently undulating, monotonous plain or prairie, rising progressively towards the W. where the foot-hills of the Rocky Mountains are reached. The state is but scantily supplied with timber. The interesting Manzanita terres (or Red Lands) occupy but a relatively small area in Nebraska, being situated in the NW. in a basin whose surface is carved out into fantastic cliffs and buttes, with narrow labyrinthine passages between. This strange and desolate tract abounds in interesting fossil remains. Eastward of this region and S. of the Nebraska, there is a tract covered with mud hills, but capable of affording pasture in the proper season. The western part of the state attains a considerable elevation, generally from 2000 to 3000 ft. or more and in Osage Rock in Banner co., reaches 5000 ft. and in Nebraska Summit 5325 ft. In the upper Nebraska valley there is some forest-land with yellow pine timber while elsewhere, especially eastward, the water courses are fringed with cottonwood, hackberry, boxelder elm, white elm, ash, oak, and other trees. Berry-bearing shrubs wild grapes, vines, and the wild plum are abundant.

Rivers—Besides the Missouri, the principal rivers are the Nebraska, the broad and shallow Platte with its North and South Forks the North Platte, and South Platte, the Elkhorn, Lodge Pole Creek, the Republican the Saline, and the Big and Little Blue rivers. Owing to their shallowness and lack of water the streams are not navigated except the Missouri.

Geology—Southeastern Nebraska is underlain by the coal measures, but its coals are mostly pinched out, and lie in very thin layers, which cannot be worked to advantage. They have, nevertheless, afforded a scanty supply of fuel of a tolerable quality. Peat is abundant and there are workable beds of lignite or brown coal. A large part of eastern Nebraska is covered by Cretaceous strata and of the western section by Tertiary (largely Miocene and Pliocene) deposits and along the Missouri there are bluffs of the loess. The glacial drift deposits are extensively distributed. There are many richly fossiliferous strata in the state, largely in areas of a comparatively recent lacustrine formation. Good limestones, sandstones, and gypsum exist in abundance and afford building-materials. Fossils and other clays are common. There are numerous salines in the state, some of which already afford a good supply of salt, mainly obtained by evaporating the brines.

Climate—The climate of the state is of a markedly continental type, with extremes of summer and winter temperature, the range of the mercury being between about -40° and 115° (in the shade). The mean January temperature to 20° The rainfall is very unequal, ranging from 20 inches, or even considerably more, in the eastern sections to less than 15 inches in the W where irrigation is made a necessary condition of successful agriculture The average annual rainfall for the state is about 23 inches

Agricultural Resources etc.—Nebraska occupies a prominent place as an agricultural state The eastern counties have everywhere a deep and fertile soil naturally covered with a tough sod The blue-joint of the prairies and the tule grass of the bottoms are excellent wild pasture and hay grounds Those lands which are broken by draws or ravines are especially prized by the grazier because they almost always afford water while in winter the draws shelter the stock from the severe winds Droughts are frequent in the W Indian corn spring wheat, rye, oats bar sorghum, butter sorghum tobacco and wool are leading products The product of the crops for 1900 was corn 210 450 064 bushels wheat 48 401 900 bushels oats 37 7 8, 572 bushels barley 55 382 bushels rye 867 237 bushels potatoes, 9 664,444 bushels and hay 1 639 484 tons The wool-crop yielded 2 448 463 pounds of washed and unwashed wool The cultivation of the sugar beet has developed into a considerable industry as likewise that of orchard fruit Stock raising is extensively carried on The live-stock in addition to cattle and horses, includes large numbers of swine Cattle do not require much protection or much hard feeding in winter and often receive no at all

Manufactures have greatly increased but are carried on chiefly as yet, for the supply of local needs Among the articles produced may be specified farm implements wagons cars boots shoes lumber cooperage furniture bricks, tiles, salt, lime, flour meal syrup harness, soap condensation tobacco cigars, metallic wares etc Smelting and meat-packing (chiefly of hogs) brewing and the manufacture of grist-mill and dairy products (butter cheese) are among the notable industries of the state

Railroad—In 1865 the first railroad trains were run in the state and there were reported 123 miles of track In 18 0 there were 65 miles in 1930 1953 miles in 1950 5407 miles and in 1900 5740 miles Omaha is the principal railroad centre

Government—The governor and the chief state officers are elected for terms of 2 years The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives, the members of both serving for 2 years The state sends 6 members to the lower house of Congress

The population in 1900 was 28,841, at which time the territory had an area nearly greater than the present state in 1870 123 993 including but very few of the 7529 Indians in 1880 452,402 in 1900 1 058 010, with 3751 Indians on reservations in 1900 1 068 599 The foreign born population in 1900 was 177 347

History—Nebraska formed successively a part of the Louisiana and Missouri territories until 1854, when the Missouri Compromise was repealed and the famous Kansas-Nebraska Bill, creating territorial governments was passed by Congress The general interest in the political destinies of Kansas for some years drew the stream of immigrants to that quarter rather than to Nebraska, which was not admitted as a state until 1867 Since that time the progress in wealth and population has been remarkable

Length from W to E 450 miles. Average breadth about 125 miles. Area, estimated at about 54,000 sq. m. Nepal contains some of the highest mountains in the world. Mount Everest (29,002 feet) and Kunchingaga (26,156 ft.) are in the NE corner and Dhaulagiri (26,836 ft.) is near the centre. Nearly the whole region consists of a succession of lofty mountains and narrow valleys in which many of the peaks of the Gogri Gundok Himal and other tributaries of the Ganges which drain the whole of Nepal have their sources. Along the base of the Himalayas stretches an undulating and in part densely wooded tract called the terai. Rice, maize, wheat, barley, cotton, sugar-cane, tea, and tobacco are among the chief crops. Fruits, drugs and dyeing materials are important products and timber is abundant. An immense amount of labor is expended upon the terracing of hill-sides and irrigation. The native animals comprise horses, large dogs, shawl goats (which yield the Cashmere wool) and sheep. Copper, iron and lead are among the mineral products, but the mining industry is on a small scale. The manufactures include textiles, metallic goods, paper (from bark) and pottery. Among the exports are rice and other grains, timber, hides, oil-seeds, tobacco, cattle, and spices. The exports to British India in recent years have amounted to $4,000,000 or $7,000,000 annually. The population consists of several tribes: Mongol, Tibetan and Aryan elements being represented, probably underlain by aboriginal (Dravidian) elements. The dominant tribe is that of the Gorkhas, a martial race, recent immigrants from Rajputana, who are Hindu in faith, are the bulk of the Nepales. There are many adherents of Buddhism. The population of Nepal is estimated at 3,000,000-4,000,000. The country is ruled by a monarch called Maharajah. The governing power is the prime minister. There is a large standing army. Capital, Kathmandu. The British waged a successful war against the Gorkhas in 1814-15 since which time the tribe has been on friendly terms and has tolerated the presence of a British resident at the capital.

Netherlands, nêr's lands or the Low Countries (Dutch, Nederlands, nâ'dêr lân'den; Fr. Pays-Bas, pâ's bâ; Ger. Niederlande, nâ'dêr lân'den) formerly a country in the W part of Europe, comprising the present kingdoms of the Netherlands and of Belgium. The surface of a large portion of the region is a dead level and much of it lies actually below the level of the sea. (See next article also Belgium.) At the time when the Romans established their dominion in this region in the first century A.C. the bulk of it was inhabited by the Batavi (in the Rhine-Meuse delta), Frisians, and other Germanic tribes, and the SW portion was peopled by Belgian Gauls. By about 400 A.D. the S portion had become subject to the Franks while the Frisians retained their independence until in the course of the eighth century they likewise succumbed to the Frankish power. At this time Christianity was introduced among them. After the disruption of the Frankish realm the greater part of the country was included in the kingdom of Germany (or from 962, in the Holy Roman Empire, as the dominions of the king of Germany came to be known) the SW corner forming part of the realm of the Western Franks. As a result of the feudal system a number of principalities arose,—Flanders, Brabant (the title of Duke of Brabant supplanted that of Duke of Lower Lotharing), Artois, Hainaut, Holland, Zealand, Gelderland, Luxemburg, etc. The bishoprics of Utrecht and Liège became important ecclesiastical principalities. The cities of Flanders, Brabant, and Holland grew flourishing by trade and manufactures, and some of them finally attained virtually the position of independent republics. In the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries Bruges, Ghent, and Antwerp especially rose to great power and splendor and these and other cities of the Netherlands played an important role in the renaissance of the arts. Between 1284 and 1443 the dukes of Burgundy acquired possession of Flanders, Artois, Namur, Brabant, Limburg, Hainaut, Holland, Zealand and Luxembourg. Thus arose the powerful but short-lived Burgundian realm for a time the most potent in Europe. By the marriage in 1477 of Mary, heiress of Charles the Bold of Burgundy with Maximilian of Austria, the fortunes of the Netherlands were united with those of the house of Hapsburg. The marriage of their son Philip with Jeanne, daughter of Ferdinand and Isabella, brought about the union of the Netherlands with Spain which was effected in 1516 when Charles (the future emperor Charles V) ascended the Spanish throne on the death of Ferdinand. The efforts of Philip II the son of Charles V to extirpate Protestantism brought about a revolt from Spain in 1568. The Union of Utrecht, effected in 1579 by William of Orange between the provinces of Holland, Zealand, Friesland, Utrecht, Overijssel, Gelderland and Groningen laid the foundations of the Dutch Republic. The struggle continued with slight intermission until the Peace of Westphalia, in 1648 when Spain finally recognized the independence of the Dutch who were under the rule of the House of Orange. It was not until now that the connection of the Dutch Netherlands with the Holy Roman Empire was formally declared severed. Spain retained possession of the Belgian Netherlands. Louis XIV of France wrested part of Flanders (French Flanders) from Spain in 1667-78. Spain was compelled in 1713-14 to cede the Netherlands to Austria, whose rule came to an end in 1794. For subsequent history see BRITAIN and the article on the kingdom of the NETHERLANDS.

Netherlands, called also Holland, a maritime kingdom on the western border of continental Europe lying between lat 50° 45' and 53° 32' N and lon 3° 24' and 12° 12' E. On the W and N it is bounded by the North Sea, on the S by Prussia, and on the E by Belgium. The greatest extent from N to S is about 199 miles, with a breadth from W to E of 124 miles. Area, 12,050 sq m (exclusive of the large area that is covered by the Zuider Zee).

Surface Character.—The Netherlands (or Low Countries, as the name implies) form the most characteristic portion of the great plain of northwestern Europe. From the middle of Belgium the country N.E. becomes an almost dead level, extending in monotonous sandy flats, with little interruption, through Prussia into Russia. The lowest part of this immense level is the country between the mouths of the Scheldt and Rhine, the region comprised in the Netherlands within this distance the Rhine-Meuse (or Maas-) level and other rivers, enter the sea through a number of arms and sluggish winding channels, the border land of which is in great part depressed below sea-level. It is estimated that nearly a fourth of the land area occupies a position extending from sea-level to 8 feet below it and one-eighth from sea-level to 3 ft. above so that were it not for the protection afforded by dikes and artificial embankments, nearly 40 per cent. of the surface would be subject to desolation by the sea. The lowest-lying lands fall to 12-15 ft. below the ocean surface. A long line of sand-dunes, rising to 30-100 ft. and more extends along the ocean front and is in part paralleled by lines of dunes in the interior. The central, eastern, and northern sections of the country occupy general elevations of from 10 to 35-50 ft. with gravel and sand-hills rising to 150-350 ft. The latter are largely of moraine or drift origin. In the region of the older rocks, SE of Limburg a maximum elevation of 1050 ft. is attained.

Polder Dikes.—The soil of the Netherlands shows all most everywhere the proof of a struggle between the ocean and the river in the alternation of salt- and fresh water deposits. Remains of forests now lie buried under the waves of the North Sea paved roads traces of villages and of cultivation are found beneath the morasses of the interior. The major portion of the country is divided by dikes some of them 60 feet high, which protect portions of land from the sea, lakes or rivers. These enclosed lands, usually of extreme fertility are called polders. On the chief dikes are roads and canals, the latter join the rivers and are generally large enough to be navigable. The work of reclaiming the waste is constantly going forward, and it may be said that more than one-third of the cultivable area of the land is represented by polder reclamation. Among the most noted of the polders are those of Haarlem, covering an area of 72 sq m (reclaimed 1540-43) of the Y, of Beemster (1608-12), Soestermeer and Purmer. The project of converting the Zuider Zee into a vast polder and interior lagoon one of the most important of modern engineering works, is now in course of execution.

Estuaries and Bays.—Among the more striking features of the Netherlands are the wide estuaries of the Scheldt and of the Maas, which latter bear off also the waters of the Rhine and the Zuider Zee which was formed by an eruption of the sea in the thirteenth century and which in its fullest extent covered 1400 sq m. Among the islands in the Scheldt-Maas-Rhine delta are Walcheren, South Beveland, North Beveland, Tholen, Schouwen, Goeree-on-Overflakkee (until recently two islands) and Vorne-on-Putten (formerly two islands). Between the mouths of the Maas and the entrance to the Zuider Zee the coast is chiefly formed of sand hills or dunes separating the low fertile meadows from the ocean. In a line with these dunes, beyond the entrance to the Zuider Zee runs a chain of islands—Texel, Vlieland, Terschelling, Ameland, etc.—which mark the original line of coast. The coast of Friesland, opposite to these islands, depends for its security altogether on artificial embankments. The Lauwer Zee, a deep bay on the confines of Friesland and Groningen owes its origin to an eruption of the ocean as does likewise the Dollart, a gulf at the mouth of the Ems on the borders of Hanover whose formation is said to have swept away 70 villages and 100,000 people.

Rivers and Canal.—The chief rivers of the Netherlands are the Rhine, Maas, Scheldt, Yssel, Vecht, and Hooft. The Rhine after entering the Netherlands soon divides the S and principal arm, which takes the name of Waal uniting with the Maas while the N arm which communicates with the Yssel proceeds parallel with the Waal under the name of Lek. A branch from the latter named the Kromme Rijn (Crooked Rhine) winds by Utrecht to the Zuider Zee, while another very diminished stream called the Old Rhine, flows from Utrecht by Leyden to the sea at Katwijk. Of the Scheldt, only the estuaries the E and the W (Old) Scheldt, are within the Dutch boundary. The Yssel and Vecht, flowing from Germany both enter the Zuider Zee at no great distance asunder. The Hooft, rising in the Beersanger Moor flows through Groningen to the Lauwer Zee. (See RAIJS, SCHMIDT, etc.) The canals of the Netherlands are numerous and important, the principal being the North Sea Canal (16 miles in length and accommodating the largest ocean steamers) running W from Amsterdam to the sea, the North Holland Canal (constructed in 1816-25 130 feet broad and 10 feet deep) for ships passing between Amsterdam and the Delder a distance of 46 miles, the Willems Canal 18 miles long connecting the Dollart with Groningen, the Wilhelms Canal, in North Brabant, and the Damster Diep extending from Groningen to the sea at Delfzijl. The Nieuwe Rijn unites Utrecht with Amsterdam while the latter city communicates with Rotterdam by a canal which touches at Haarlem, Leyden, and Delft, passing also near the Hague.

Climate.—The climate of the Netherlands is humid and changeable, violent winds are frequent and heavy sea-fogs are driven in, which injure vegetation. The winters and summers are both tempered by proximity to the sea. At Utrecht (lat 52° 5' N) the average annual temperature is about 56° the mean temperature of winter being 34.5° and of summer 66°. The average annual rainfall is only about 30 inches but rain falls during about 300 days of the year. Low fogs visit the marshy districts in autumn.

Rural Industry.—Gardening and agriculture have attained in this naturally unproductive country a high degree of perfection. The agricultural and grazing lands together make up nearly two-thirds of the entire area of the country. About 20 per cent. of the surface is still waste-land, while 7-8 per cent. is woodland. Wheat of excellent quality is grown in some portions of the southern provinces. Rye, oats, potatoes, beets and peas are among the leading crops. The cultivation of the sugar-beet is an important industry and large quantities of flax are produced. The cultivation of tobacco is carried on but has declined that of madder formerly important, has nearly ceased. Cullinary vegetables are raised not merely for supplying the internal demand, but also for the exportation of the seeds. It is in live-stock and dairy produce, however, that the rural industry of the Netherlands shows its strength. The Dutch horses are remarkable for size and strength and the excellence of the Dutch horned cattle is almost unrivalled. The total number of cattle in the country in 1900 was about 1,650,000 of horses, 300,000 of sheep 770,000 and of pigs, 1,279,000. Immense quantities of butter and cheese are marketed. The poultry yard as well as every object of husbandry which demands care is to the Dutch farmer a source of wealth. Bee-keeping is actively carried on. The mineral resources of the Netherlands are wholly unimportant and are limited to deposits of coal (in Limburg), iron-ores, clays and building-stones.

Fisheries, Manufacturing Industries, Commerce.—Living along the estuaries of great rivers and on the shores of a sea abounding in fish, the Dutch early became a seafaring people. The number of vessels belonging to the merchant navy in 1901 was 417 sailing vessels and 235 steamers. In the same year 6861 vessels of all kinds were engaged in the fisheries the product of the herring-fishery alone being valued at 7,890,345 guilders. The oyster product is very large. Manufactures have flourished to a remarkable degree, though never a predominating interest. The linen and paper of the Netherlands have long held a high rank. The manufacture of woollen cloth contras in Leyden, Gouda, and Utrecht, which last-named place is famous also for its silk velvet. The distilleries of Schiedam are well known. Other leading industries are found in the preparation of leather, sugar refining, and the manufacture of chemicals and tobacco-pipes. The absence of coal and the prevalence of strong winds cause windmills to be extensively employed as a motive-power in all kinds of work. The Netherlands belong to the leading trading countries of the world. The value of the imports for home consumption in 1903 was 2,172,000,000 guilders or florins (about $806,000,000) and that of the exports of domestic products 1,935,000,000 guilders (about $750,000,000). The foreign trade is mainly with Germany, Great Britain, Belgium, the Dutch East Indies, the United States, and Russia. The bulk of the commerce by sea is carried on through Rotterdam, Amsterdam, and Flushing. Rotterdam is one of the principal seaports of continental Europe. The length of railroads operated in 1901 was 1730 miles.

Colonies.—The Netherlands possess a wide extent of colonies and dependencies in Asia and America with which an extensive commerce is carried on contributing materially to the greatness of the kingdom. They are the Dutch East Indies (or Netherlands Indies—separately noticed), the West Indian islands of Curaçao, Bonaire, St. Eustatius, etc., and the South American colony of Dutch Guiana (or Surinam).

The following 6 cities had a population of more than 50,000 at the close of 1902:

Amsterdam	538,800	Groningen	69,800
Rotterdam	348,500	Haarlem	68,000
The Hague	228,500	Arnhem	55,000
Utrecht	108,500	Leyden	66,000

About three-fifths of the inhabitants of the Netherlands are Protestants and about one-tenth of the remainder Roman Catholics. At the close of 1899 there were 2,471,000 persons belonging to the Dutch Reformed Church, 528,000 other Protestants, 1,790,000 Roman Catholics and 104,000 Jews. The sect of Jansenists numbers about 9000. All religious sects and persuasions are politically on a perfectly equal footing. There are 4 universities in the Netherlands at Leyden, Utrecht, Groningen and Amsterdam. The Dutch language is related to the Platt-Deutsch of northwestern Germany and is nearly identical with the Flemish. The Dutch literature is very rich and extensive, and in the history of the fine arts especially painting the people of the Netherlands occupy a prominent place.

History.—(For the history prior to 1579 see the preceding article.) In 1579 the people of the northern Netherlands, united in the defense of their liberties against Spain laid the foundations of the Dutch Republic by the Union of Utrecht, into which 7 states entered,—namely Holland, Zealand, Utrecht, Gelderland, Overijssel, Groningen, and Friesland. Under the leadership of William of Orange (succeeded 1644) and his son, Maurice of Nassau (died 1625) the Dutch achieved their independence, which was recognized by Spain in 1648. Their country constituted a federal republic which was ruled by stadtholders of the House of Orange. At the end of the sixteenth century the Dutch gained possession of the Molucca Islands and secured a monopoly of the spice-trade. At this time they supplanted the Portuguese in Java, of which they gradually made themselves masters in the course of the seveneenth and eighteenth centuries. Early in the seventeenth century the Dutch West India Company established settlements in Surinam (Guiana) and New Netherland. About the middle of the century they ousted the Portuguese from Ceylon and began colonizing the region about the Cape of Good Hope. At this time, when they owned more shipping than any other nation of Europe they waged fierce wars with the English, in which for a moment they triumphed. In 1664 the English took New Netherland from them. From 1689 to 1702 Holland and England were united under one sovereign, William III. In the course of the eighteenth century the Dutch lost their commercial pre-eminence. In 1794-95 their country was conquered by the French, who established the Batavian Republic. In 1806 the kingdom of Holland was constituted for Louis Bonaparte brother of Napoleon. In 1810 his realm was incorporated with the French Empire. In the mean time the commerce of Holland was nearly annihilated and the Dutch colonial possessions were seized by the British. The French were expelled at the close of 1813. In 1815 the Congress of Vienna united Holland and Belgium into a single realm the kingdom of the Netherlands for the House of Orange. By the acts of the congress England was allowed to return Cape Colony, Ceylon and a large part of the Dutch possessions in Guiana. Luxembourg was erected into a grand-duchy for the king of the Netherlands (to continue part of the Germanic body). In 1830 a revolt took place in Belgium whose inhabitants had not willingly submitted to the sway of their Dutch neighbors. The French came to the assistance of Belgium and in 1839 the liberation of the country was achieved. A final settlement between the Netherlands and Belgium was effected in 1839. Limburg and Luxembourg being divided between the sovereigns of the two countries. The dynastic connection between the Netherlands and the grand-duchy of Luxembourg was severed in 1890.

Nevada, ne-vá dá (Ep. snow clad) one of the western states of the American Union bounded N by Oregon and Idaho, E by Utah and Arizona, SW and W by California. The northern border of the state is in lat. 42° N, the eastern limit is for the most part, the meridian of 114° W. and southward for more than 200 miles from the NW angle of the state the boundary lies close to the meridian of 120° W. Excepting small areas in the N which are drained by affluents of the Columbia and a small section in the S whence the water flows into the Colorado River all the state belongs to the so-called Great Basin (or Fremont Basin) a region whose southerly waters do not flow to the sea. At the extreme SE the Colorado River for some distance separates Nevada from Arizona. Area of the land-surface, 109 740 sq. m.

Face of the Country—The Great Basin is in reality a series of long, narrow basins, running N and S and separated from one another by rugged, steep, and in some cases, lofty mountains. Such are the East Humboldt Mountains, the Goebate, Ungewash White Pine, Piñon Tryabé, Humboldt, Santa Rosa, Quinn's River Lookout, Trinity Aetolope, Rabbit Hole, Panola, Pine Nut, Desert, Opal Spring, Las Vegas, Quartz Sedars, Toiyas, Diamond Piquop, Granite Shell Creek Torcarr and other ranges mostly short, and in many cases traversed by deep and convenient passes, while the intermediate valleys are frequently broad deserts, where grow the grama-wood and sage-brush and other scanty herbage in other cases they are narrow canyons or again they are the basins of shallow lakes, fed by the mountain snows. (See Great Basin). The general elevation of the surface is 4000 feet or more above sea-level. Wheeler Peak, near the eastern boundary attains an altitude of 13 068 feet. Piñon Mount attains an altitude of 11 977 ft. Other elevations are Tryabé Dome, 11 770 ft. Mount Stillman 11 623 ft. Davis Mountain, 11 666 ft. and White Pine Mountain 11 277 ft.

Hydrography—Dividing diagonally the mountain ranges and valleys sweeps the small river Humboldt in a general SW course for some 375 miles. It is remarkable as far as the only E. and W. valley in the state available for the passage of a railway and this valley determines the course of one of the transcontinental lines of railroad. This river is also remarkable for its alkaline waters. All the streams of the state are small and excepting the Bruner Owyhee, etc., in the N, which flow into the Snake River north and the Virgin, Beaver Dam, Muddy, and Vegas rivers in the S, which are tributaries of the Colorado, all the rivers of Nevada end in lakes or sinks, the latter being marshy spots in the desert sands. Such rivers are the Walker, Carson, and Truckee, the last-named flowing from Lake Tahoe into Pyramid Lake. Most of the lakes are either alkaline or saline, and some are composed of highly complex and even caustic solutions, but a few are salt. Of the fresh lakes many are shallow and overgrown with the tule, or reed (Scirpus validus). The chief saline waters are those of Pyramid, Winnemucca, Humboldt, Walker and Carson lakes, which in part occupy the position of a vast outflowing lake of the Quaternary period and known to geologists as Lake Lahontan. The beautiful Lake Tahoe with a depth of 1500 feet, whose surface is elevated 8700 feet, is on the California boundary.

Climate—The climate of the state is dry and healthful with summer and winter temperatures well accentuated (maximum about 115° minimum -30° to -35°). Violent winds are rare, and there is but little snow in the non mountainous regions. The average annual rainfall for most parts is 10 inches or less.

Agricultural and Pastoral Resources Vegetation etc.—It is its scanty rainfall rather than poverty of soil that gives Nevada the reputation of being a desert, for in cases where irrigation is practicable, even the alkaline plains in many instances have proved very productive. In the better settled districts considerable quantities of spring wheat, barley, oats, potatoes, butter, wool, garden vegetables, etc. are produced. Much hay is cut upon the marshy river bottoms and in some of the splendid valleys, whose bottom lands afford excellent blue-joint and red top for hay, while the uplands and plains have excellent sand grass and bunch-grass for grazing. The valued white sage (or winter fat) affords the best of winter pasturage. The most extensively irrigated sections of the state are in the western central and Humboldt River regions. Somewhat less than 4 per cent. of the area of the state is included in farms. The product of the chief agricultural crops in 1900 was wheat 991 190 bushels, potatoes, 273 486 bushels and hay 375 023 tons. In spite of its sharp winter climate and its parched and arid soil Nevada has proved a profitable region for the stock raiser, herded cattle fattening readily without grain, so rich in the winter herbage. The wool-clip in 1900 yielded 4 592 903 pounds of washed and unwashed wool. In the extreme S cotton and sub-tropical fruits, like the orange do very well. The flora of the state is of a very marked character. Timber trees are nowhere very abundant. The white pine (a fir entirely distinct from the Eastern white pine) is extensively cut for timber and the great advance of mining and smelting operations has already stripped many of the mountains of their scanty forest growth.

Geology, Minerals etc.—Many of the geological ages, from the Eocene to the Tertiary and Quaternary are here represented, the outcrops of the older formations (chiefly Azoic and Cambrian (or Silurian) appearing in and upon the mountain ranges. The main uplifting of the mountain-ranges appears to have been accomplished in the Jurassic period. Not a few evidences of comparatively recent volcanic action are present in almost every part of the state, besides which the strata are extensively disturbed by much more ancient dikes of plutonic rock.

For years Nevada was the leading state in the value of its metallic products, and in 1875 it yielded somewhat more of the precious metals than all the rest of North America. In that year the product (mainly silver) was valued at $49 473 369. The gold and silver product in 1900 was gold 113 681 fine ounces (valued at $2 350 000), and silver 1 229 760 fine ounces (valued at $750 151). Under Virginia City and Gold Hill lies the famous Comstock Lode of silver and gold bearing quartz once the most profitable mining deposit in the world. The recent discoveries in Nye (Tonopah) and Esmeralda (Goldfield) counties have largely increased the state's output of the precious metals. In 1903 the gold product was valued at $3 070 350 silver $2 098 612. Copper, lead, quicksilver and nickel are also found. There are extensive deposits of native sulphur, borax, soda, potash, rock salt, pyritic compounds, uranous iron, marble, granite, alabaster, slate, and other valuable minerals. Lignite and other forms of coal have been mined sparingly in the Elko River region and elsewhere. Mineral and thermal waters abound.

The milling and smelting of ore and the sawing of lumber are as yet the only important industries. Lumber sawing has been largely carried on in the mountains, but has declined, owing to the swift consumption of all available timber. The Carson River and other mountain-streams furnish water power.

Counties, Towns, Railroads—Nevada is divided into 14 counties as follows: Churchill, Douglas, Elko, Esmeralda, Baraka, Humboldt, Lander, Lincoln, Lyon, Nye, Ormsby, Storey, Washoe, and White Pine. The principal towns are Reno (pop in 1900 4800), Virginia City (1895) and Carson City the capital (2100). Some towns which a few years since were thriving are now abandoned on account of the failure of mining enterprises. In 1867 there were 30 miles of railroad in Nevada. In 1870 693 miles. In 1890 729 miles. In 1890 923 miles and in 1900 1027 miles.

Constitution etc.—The governor and state officers are chosen for 4 years. The legislature consists of a senate and an assembly. The members of the former are elected for 4 years and those of the latter for 2 years. The state sends 1 member to the lower house of Congress.

Education.—There are a few public high-schools. The state university (or University of Nevada) a educational institution with about 300 students, is located at Reno.

The Population in 1860 was 4637 in 1876 42,491 in 1890 62,266 in 1890 92,761 in 1900 122,330.

History.—The region included within the present state of Nevada was acquired by the United States from Mexico in 1848. Most of it was included in the territory of Utah as originally constituted. Nevada was organized as a territory in 1861 and admitted as a state into the Union in 1864. The present boundaries were established in 1866.

J. on the W. bank of the Passaic River about 4 miles from its entrance into Newark Bay and 9 miles W. of New York city with which it is connected by the Central R. of New Jersey and the Pennsylvania, the Lackawanna, the Erie, and other railroads. Lat. 40° 45' N. lon 74° 10' W. It is the largest city in the state. It is regularly laid out with straight, rectangularly-growing streets, the principal thoroughfares,--Broad Street and Market Street,--intersecting near the centre of the city. Broad Street is bordered for long distances by public squares, adorned with stately elm trees. Newark contains few notable public buildings (government building, Free Library etc.) but a number of business establishments are housed in imposing and stately edifices. There are some handsome churches. Among the educational institutions are Newark Academy, Newark Seminary, Newark Technical School, St. Elizabeth's Academy and St. Benedict's College. The New Jersey Historical Society with a library etc. has its seat here. The charitable and benevolent associations are numerous.

The prosperity and rapid growth of Newark are due to its manufactures, which embrace every variety and find markets in all parts of the world. Among the most extensive of these are cotton thread, chemicals, jewelry, leather, machinery, trucks and bays, clothing, harness, carriages, boots and shoes also and iron, electrical apparatus, sewing machines, india-rubber callion and paper besides the products of a large number of extensive breweries. The value of the manufactured product is $20,000,000-$30,000,000 annually. Many of the business men of Newark have their homes in the adjoining towns--Elizabeth, the Oranges, Montclair and others--to which in addition to the steam railways, access is had by a great network of electric roads. On the opposite bank of the Passaic is the manufacturing town of Harrison. An extensive system of public parks to embrace large stretches of the charmingly diversified country in the vicinity has been inaugurated. New Brunswick, a province of the Dominion of Canada, bounded on the N by the province of Quebec, from which it is partly separated by the Saguenay River and by the Bay of Chaleur E by the Gulf of St. Lawrence and Northumberland Strait, the latter separating it from Prince Edward Island S.E. (for a short distance) by Nova Scotia, S. by the Bay of Fundy and on the W by the state of Maine, from which it is partly separated by the St. Croix and St. John rivers, and by Quebec. It extends from lat. 45° 3' (exclusive of Grand Menan Island) to 48° N and from lon. 63° 55' to 69° 3' W. Area of the land-surface, 28,190 sq. m. Its coast-line is about 500 miles in length interrupted at the point of junction with Nova Scotia, where an isthmus not more than 11 miles in breadth connects the two provinces and separates Northumberland Strait from the Bay of Fundy. The surface of the country is generally flat or undulating in the form of a plain with some hills skirting the Bay of Fundy and the rivers St. John and Saguenay. The highest summit is Bold Mountain a granitic mass 2470 feet in elevation. Bold Mountain is 1600 feet high. The shores of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and Northumberland Strait abound in fine ship harbors (each at the mouth of a considerable river) from which is exported much fine timber. For about 12 miles inland the country is low and skirted with marshes.

The face of the province is traversed in all directions by navigable rivers, chief of which is the St. John. Among the numerous bays with which the coast is indented are the Bay of Chaleur, on the N coast, with many excellent harbors on the N. Miramichi, Richibucto, Buctouche, Cocagne, and Shediac; on the S.W. Passamaquoddy Bay on the borders of Maine, and on the S. St. John Harbor and Chignecto Bay (with Shediac Bay and Cumberland Basin)

The lakes are numerous, but of small extent. The principal is Grand Lake, 36 miles long.

Along the shores of the Bay of Chaleur and the Gulf of St. Lawrence gray sandstone and gray clay-slate predominate, with detached rocks of granite, quartz, and ironstone; on the S coast, limestone clay-slate, with sandstone, interrupted occasionally by gneiss, trap and granite. Coal and iron-ore are abundant. The Albert Coal Mine, at one time thought to contain some of the most valuable deposits of bituminous matter on the continent (the product, called Albertite) has been exhausted. Copper, antimony, nickel, and manganese are found but the general mining industry has not been extensively developed.

The climate of New Brunswick is subject to great extremes of heat and cold, the range of temperature being from -24° to 36°. The prevailing summer winds are from the WSW and S when from the SW dense fogs are often produced on the Bay of Fundy and extend from 15 to 20 miles inland.

A large portion of the province is covered with dense forests of pine, hemlock, spruce, cedar etc. which furnish immense quantities of timber for export and ship building. Potatoes, turnips, peas, beans, and other leguminous plants thrive abundantly but agriculture has made only indifferent progress. The inhabitants generally find it more profitable to follow the lumbering business. The chief agricultural crops in 1900 were oats 2,251,850 bushels, potatoes, 4,797,059 bushels, hickory, 1,537,616 bushels, and spring wheat, 504,301 bushels. The rivers, lakes, and sea-coast of New Brunswick abound in fish of almost every variety. The Bay of Chaleur and Bay of Fundy are celebrated for their fisheries. The salmon-fisheries of New Brunswick are among the finest in the world. The Bretonne Caracassette and Cognac oyster-beds are as prolific as they are famous, and the finest lobsters are found in profusion. Ship-building is extensively prosecuted in the province, more especially at St. John and on the Miramichi. Vessels are also built at St. Andrews at various coasts and harbors on the Bay of Fundy along the banks of the St. John and Petitcodiac, and at Cocagne, Kuchibucto, Bathurst, Dalhousie, Campbellton, and other ports on the N shore. The principal articles manufactured in New Brunswick are sawed lumber, cotton and woolen goods, wooden ware of all descriptions, paper, iron castings, nails, mill-machinery, locomotives, steam-engines, boots and shoes, canned goods, refined sugar, rope and cordage, etc.

The province is traversed by three or four important trunk lines of railway and by several minor lines and branches, the whole affording communication with the principal towns of Canada and the United States. There were in 1900 1439 miles of railroad in operation.

The province is divided into 15 counties or districts, as follows: Albert, Charlotte, Gloucester, Kent, Kings, Madawaska, Northumberland, Queens, Restigouche, St. John, Sanbary, Victoria, Westmorland and York. Pop. in 1901 331,130. Capital, Fredericton. The largest city is Saint John.

A large majority of the inhabitants are descendants of emigrants from Great Britain and Ireland. There are a number of French Acadians, settled chiefly in the counties on the N shore and in the valley of the Madawaska and there are also a few Micmacs, Maliseets, and other Indians in the northern part of the province and on the St. John River.

The affairs of the province are administered by a lieutenant-governor aided by an executive council and a legislative chamber of 46 members. The most important educational institution is the University of Fredericton.

New Brunswick was first settled by the French in 1639. It formed part, with Nova Scotia, of Acadia, which was ceded by France to England in 1713. Boundary disputes regarding New Brunswick continuing however till the peace of Paris in 1763. The first British settlers in the province emigrated from Scotland to the Miramichi in 1764. In 1764 New Brunswick was separated from Nova Scotia and constituted a separate colony. In 1867 New Brunswick became part of the Dominion of Canada.

St. Mary Placentia, and Fortune, in the S.) many of which are extensive, commodious, and well sheltered. The interior of the island has never been thoroughly explored, but appears to be a rocky undulating plateau of no great elevation much intersected by rivers and lakes and but thinly wooded, except on the banks of the rivers. Ridges or isolated hills known as table-tops, rise from this plateau to heights of 1000-1500 feet. There are districts called barrens, occupying the summits of the hills and elevated tracts, covered with a thin and scrubby vegetation with patches of gravel and boulders and scrambling fragments of rock. In the W a short distance from the coast and continued into the North Peninsula are the Long Range Mountains 1500-2000 feet high. The sea-cliffs are for the most part bold and lofty (Blomidon a Cliff or the Blomidons, on the Bay of Islands, 2125 feet) with deep water close to the shore.

The rivers of Newfoundland are numerous, but the majority are small. The largest are the Humber River of Exploits, Gander Terra Nova, and Salmon. Nearly all the rivers issue from lakes or ponds in the interior. Many of them abound in excellent salmon. Fresh water lakes and ponds are also numerous, the surface covered with fresh water being estimated at one-third of the whole island. The principal lakes in this island are Gander, Deer, Grand and Red Indian. The prevalent formation of Newfoundland is granite, and in some parts porphyry quartz, gneiss, mica, and clay-slate representing the Laurentian and Haronian periods, with areas of Cambrian and Silurian (principally in the W.) and a considerable development of the Carboniferous series. The minerals of the island comprise silver, copper, lead, chromite, iron, magnetite, iron, specular iron, manganese, nickel, plumbago, gypsum, serpentine, Jasper, white and black marble, limestone and coal. The vast gypsum deposits occur principally on St. George Bay and along the Codroy River. The coal is a continuation of the deposits of Cape Breton and its main locality is near St. George Bay. Some gold-bearing quartz has latterly been discovered in the eastern parts.

The climate, being insular is not liable to so great changes in temperature as that of the neighboring continental provinces, the winter being much milder and the summer not nearly so warm. The average temperature of February the coldest month, is 22° of July the hottest, 60° and of the year 49°. The winter lasts from December till April. The summer is short. In May and the beginning of June dense fogs prevail on the banks and neighboring shores. The principal trees are spruce, birch, larch, willow, ash and fir. These do not attain to a large size. Deciduous evergreens are to be met in great variety berry growing bushes abound in every swamp. European and American grasses also red and white clover are abundant. In several sections agriculture can be carried on with profit. In the neighborhood of many of the lakes and rivers there are valuable soils. Potatoes yield well and are of excellent quality. Green crops thrive in many districts. Wheat is grown to some extent and there have been fair crops of barley, oats, and hay. Apple, plum and cherries have been raised with success. Gooseberries, strawberries, and raspberries of very good quality are grown. In 1901 there were 84,553 acres of cultivated land. The timber lands are unutilized and there is little lumbering.

The only animal peculiar to the island is the Newfoundland dog famous the world over. The better breed is obtained now chiefly from Belle Isle (Island). Among the wild animals are the deer, wolf, bear, beaver, marten and lynx. Land and aquatic birds abound. Fowl are numerous on the coast, as are also whales, grampsons and porpoises. While for fish there is no place in the world comparable to Newfoundland, especially for cod. The famous Grand Banks swarm with fish. These banks form a vast submarine elevation, being over 600 miles in length and 200 miles in breadth with a depth of water varying from 10 to 180 fathoms. Fishing on the banks is open to all. The cod-fishery opens in June and lasts till the middle of November and may be said to form the chief occupation of the inhabitants of the island. The average annual value of this fishery is $5,000,000-$8,000,000 including the dried cod fish exported, the quantity consumed by the population and the oil extracted from the fish. From 25,000 to 30,000 people engage in the Labrador fishery. The shore fishery is prosecuted along the whole coast-line in Newfoundland and is the mainstay of a very large portion of the population. The seal-fishery is next in importance employing many sailing vessels and a number of steamers. Another important branch of the fishing industry is the taking and canning of lobsters. The fishing fleet of Newfoundland consisted in 1880 of 1449 vessels and over 20,000 boats. The value of the obtained product were dried cod $5,446,087 and oil, $301,001 seal-skins $182,065, seal oil $423,011 canned lobsters $441,593 and pickled herring, $148,611. The number of inhabitants engaged in the fisheries in 1901 was 62,674. The imports of the colony consist of all articles used for food and clothing as well as for general domestic purposes. The principal exports are fish and fish oils, seal-oil and skins. Trade is chiefly with Great Britain, the United States, and the British colonies.

The public affairs of Newfoundland are administered by a governor and executive council of 9 members, a legislative council not exceeding 15 members and a legislative assembly of 26 representatives. There were in 1899 638 miles of railroads in operation and had traversing the interior from B to W. Communication between all important points along the coast is made by regular lines of steamers. The inhabitants of Newfoundland are principally the descendants of the settlers from England and Ireland. The aboriginal inhabitants have been extinct for many years past. There are a few Micmacs in the island. The population of the island in 1901 was 21,037. Connected with it administratively is the eastern division of Labrador with a population of 2947. Capital, St. John's with a population of 25,684. Other towns are Harbor Grace (pop. 184) Carbonear, Tullaghan, and Bonaville. Newfoundland is supposed to have been discovered by Northmen about the year 1000. It was rediscovered by John Cabot in 1497. Its fisheries attracted attention from Portugal, Spain, England and France. In 1583 Sir Humphrey Gilbert took possession for Elizabeth but the claim of England was long disputed by France. In 1713 it was declared by the treaty of Utrecht to belong wholly to Great Britain. The French reserving a right to fish on certain parts of the coast, the rocky coasts of St. Pierre and Miquelon being also assigned to them on condition that they should not be used for military purposes. The first legislative assembly met in 1835.

New Guinea (ghin co) or Papua, a large island lying N of Australia, from which it is in part separated by Torres Strait. The western half, with an area of about 152,000 sq m and a population estimated at 200,000 is a possession of Holland the eastern half forms British New Guinea (area, 00 540 sq m., pop. 000 000 inclusive of the D'Entrecasteaux and Louisiade island groups) and Kaiser-Wilhelms Land. See BRITISH NEW GUINEA, KAISER-WILHELM'S LAND, PAPUA, etc.

New Guinea, Dutch, a possession of the Netherlands, comprising virtually all of the island of Papua lying W of the meridian of 141° E lon. Area, about 102,000 sq m. Pop. in 1900, estimated at about 200 000. The region both on the coast-line and in the interior is still largely unknown. Its most important features are the great indentation in the N known as Geelvink Bay and the mountains which are assumed to traverse the interior in a more or less E and W direction, and which have received the names of Charles Louis Mountains in about lon 136° , and that of the Reow Range farther east. Some of the highest elevations have been thought to reach 8000-10 000 or even 12 000 feet, but the determinations of altitude are doubtful. The largest stream is the Amberne River which discharges on the N coast immediately W of lon 138° E. The climatic conditions are essentially tropical with a generally high temperature (annual average about 79°) and little variation. Much of the surface is covered with luxuriant forests (palms, acacias), whose primeval character has as yet been but little disturbed. The cultivated plants are rice, sugar cane, maize, various tropical fruits, bread fruit, spices, etc. The indigenous quadrupeds are mainly of the marsupial type. Among the birds are a number of the more beautiful species of bird of paradise, the emu and several green pigeons. The native inhabitants are Papuans (mixed with Malays) and the so-called mountain Papuans or Alfurus. There are a number of mission and trading stations, which are regular ports of call, and of which the most important is Dorey near Capo Waike on the N coast.

New Hampshire, one of the New England states of the American Union, bounded N by the province of Quebec Canada, E by Maine (from which on the SE it is separated by the Salmon Falls River) and the Atlantic Ocean S by Massachusetts, and W by Vermont. Its W boundary is the W bank of the Connecticut River as far northward as the mouth of Hall's Stream which affluents the state boundary line ascends to its source, and thence it follows eastwardly the crest of one of the ranges called Notre Dame Mountains by the Canadians, till the W boundary of Maine is reached. Its southern limit is in lat. 42° 40' N (very nearly) and the northern in 45° 18' N. Area of the land-surface, 9006 sq m., of the appertaining waters, about 300 sq m.

Face of the Country—Most of the state has a rough and hilly surface, except the extreme SE. The mountains are, with the exception of those of North Carolina, the loftiest members of the Appalachian system and present the highest summits of the northeast United States. The White Mountains (including the Franconia Mountains) in the northern half of the state, are noted for their wild and grand scenery. The loftiest summits are Mount Washington 6293 feet Adams, 5605 ft. Jefferson 5725 ft. Clay 5544 ft. Madison 5380 ft. Lafayette, 5260 ft. With the exception of the last (which is in the Franconia Mountains) all of these are grouped in the Presidential Range. Southward of the White Mountains proper there are numerous elevated points, of which Mount Chocomaus (3508 ft.), Moosilauke (about 4800 ft.) and Grand Monadnock (3190 ft.) are among the most noteworthy. The lake scenery of the state is hardly less beautiful than the scenery of the mountains. The largest of the internal bodies of water is Lake Winnepesaukee (Winnepesaukee) in the south-central part. Other lakes all of which attract sportsmen and summer-residents, are Umbagog (in the NE, on the Maine boundary line) New Found Squam and Sanapee. The primeval forests of the extreme N afford much timber and are the resort of the angler and sportsman in the proper season. The valley of the Connecticut is noted for the quiet beauty of its farms and villages.

Rivers—The principal streams are the Connecticut with its tributaries—the Upper, Lower Wild Ammonoosuck and the Mascota, Sugar and Ashuelot; the Merrimack with its longest arm, the Pemigewasset, and its tributaries—the Winnepesaukee, Contoosook, Souhegan, Nashua, Spickett, Suncook, etc., the Piscataqua, whose estuary is the harbor of Portsmouth, and which receives the Squamaco, Lamprey, Cocheco and Salmon Falls, and the rivers Ompemuncie, and Androscoggin, which flow into Maine from this state. The streams of New Hampshire afford great water-power which is largely utilized.

Coast, etc.—The coast of New Hampshire extends about 22 miles in a right line and the only harbor is shared by Portsmouth and Kittery Me. The Isles of Shoals, in the Atlantic Ocean belong in part to New Hampshire and in part to Maine. At Mye and Hampton there are fine beaches much resorted to in summer.

Geology—The Eozoic (or Laurentian and Huronian) rocks prevail throughout most of New Hampshire. In the SE there are highly metamorphosed strata of early Paleozoic age. Near the rivers there are some large alluvial plains. Glacial drift and volcanic boulders cover the larger part of the state, even to nearly the loftiest points on the mountains. The metallic wealth of the state is not large and consists in the main of iron-ores (worked chiefly at Franconia) copper lead silver zinc (these three in New Hampshire and Warren) and tin of which a vein is found near Jackson. Fine building granite is extensively quarried at several points (Concord, Plymouth, Milford, Pelham, etc.). Franconia has quarries for a fine sandstone which is also common elsewhere. Some of the largest beryl known to exist have been found in New Hampshire, at Island and Acworth. Useful mineral waters flow at several points. Mica, pumice, quartz, and scoria-stones (in Indian Pond, White Mountain) and pyrites are among the utilized minerals. The granite quarried in 1893 was valued at $4,151. In 1891 the production of iron was 65,000 tons; in 1890 13,113 tons.

Climate—New Hampshire enjoys a beautiful climate, with heavy or severe winters. In the southern part of the state the average January temperature is about 30°–35° and the temperature of July is 60°. The northern part is considerably colder. There the mercury sometimes registers a temperature of—41°. The general annual rainfall is 30–35 inches, increasing somewhat on the sea-board and considerably on the mountains.

Agriculture—Although large gains were noted in every census of New Hampshire previous to 1880 yet her agricultural interests have long been declining the farming population removing in great numbers to the manufacturing towns and to other states. In the valley lands of the Connecticut, even in the N. and in some parts of the Merrimack valley there are exceedingly fertile and valuable farms and many of the abandoned farms were once productive. Much of the land however is stony and of an unproductive character, and gives better returns as woodland and pasture than as tillage-land. The hay-crop is by far the most important in New Hampshire. The chief agricultural crops in 1890 were oats, 995,148 bushels; corn, 934,768 bushels; wheat, 9085 bushels; barley, 102,186 bushels; rye, 15,168 bushels; buckwheat, 61,578 bushels; potatoes, 1,499,516 bushels; and hay, 515,865 tons. The remaining woodland of the state, almost entirely of second growth except in the extreme N. and consisting mainly of pine and spruce, was estimated in 1890 to cover about 5200 sq. m. or somewhat more than half of the surface. Fruit-raising is generally profitable. Dairy farming and wool growing are carried on to some extent. Tobacco is grown in the NW part of the state, near the Connecticut River; the soil of the valley being well adapted to this crop. Milk is very profitably shipped by rail to the Boston market.

Manufacture—constitutes by far the most important industrial interest of New Hampshire. The heavy cities of Manchester, Dover and Nashua and scores of smaller towns, have flourishing manufactures. Indeed there is hardly a town of any considerable size which has not more or less manufacturing industry. Cotton and woollen goods, boots and shoes, machinery and other metallic wares are the leading articles of manufacture but paper, carriages, furniture, harness, leather, lumber, wooden ware, and a very large variety of other goods are extensively made. The values of some of the leading articles of manufacture in 1890 were: boots and shoes, $23,406,558; woollens, $16,381,666; cotton goods, $23,995,249; paper and wood-pulp, $7,264,733; lumber and timber products, $9,215,310.

The railroads, which in 1846 extended 92 miles in 1890 measured 1147 miles, and in 1900 1193 miles.

The counties are 10 in number—viz. Belknap, Carroll, Cheshire, Coos, Grafton, Hillsboro, Merrimack, Rockingham, Strafford, and Sullivan.

The principal cities and towns are Concord the capital (pop. in 1900 19,652) Manchester (60,887) Nashua (23,898) Dover (13,297) Portsmouth (10,837) Keene Rochester Berlin Somersworth, Laconia, Claremont, Exeter, and Franklin. These are nearly all important manufacturing centres.

Government, etc.—The governor and the principal state officers as well as the members of the legislature (senators and representatives) are elected biennially. The state sends 2 members to the lower house of the national Congress.

Education—The public school system of New Hampshire is an effective one. All parts of the state except the sparsely settled districts having excellent free schools. Hanover is the seat of Dartmouth College with its affiliated schools of science, engineering, medicine and agriculture. The leading educational institutions of the state. Other educational institutions are St. Anselm's College, at Manchester; Phillips Exeter Academy at Exeter; St. Paul's School at Concord; and Proctor Academy at Andover. The state normal school is at Portsmouth. Among the public institutions are the state insane asylum and the state prison at Concord; an incorporated orphanage at Franklin; a state reform school at Manchester; and a home for disabled soldiers and sailors at Tilton.

Population—The original settlers of New Hampshire were of English descent, with a large admixture of the vigorous and enterprising Scotch Irish stock, from which many of the principal New Hampshire families trace their descent but there has been much emigration to other states and this emigration has been only in part compensated for by the inflow of foreign immigrants principally of Irish, French Canadian and Nova Scotian birth. Pop. in 1790 141,899; in 1800 183,621; in 1810 214,300; in 1820 244,101; in 1830 269,328; in 1840 284,714; in 1850 317,970; in 1860 379,011; in 1870 418,400; in 1880 440,991; in 1890 536,630; and in 1900 611,588. The foreign-born inhabitants in 1900 numbered 88,101.

History—A part of New Hampshire was included in the grant made to Mason and George by the council for New England in 1623. The settlement of the region began in 1623. About twenty years later it came under the jurisdiction of Massachusetts. In 1680 New Hampshire was constituted a royal province. The boundaries were not definitely fixed until long after New Hampshire was one of the thirteen original states (1776). This state has given to the nation one president, Franklin Pierce.

Conn. and the largest and most populous city of the state is situated at the head of New Haven Bay 4 miles above its entrance into Long Island Sound and on the New York New Haven and Hartford R. 73 miles ENE of New York. Lat. of the observatory 41. 19. 23. N. lon. 73. 26. 5. W. New Haven stands upon a plain which is enclosed landward by an amphitheatre of hills of which two called East Rock and West Rock rise from 300 to 400 feet in rugged, perpendicular precipices, producing a very picturesque effect. Three small streams, the Quinnipiac (Quinepiac) on the E. with Mill River its affluent and the West River on the W. intersect this plain and fall into the harbor. The streets of New Haven are wide and generally skirted with majestic elms for which this city is noted and from which it has received the name of City of Elms. East Rock Park with its driveway to the top and West Rock Park with the famous Judges Cave, the place of concealment of the regicides Whalley and Goffe, are among the pleasure-grounds of the outskirts, to which the city itself adds a number of smaller parks. On the Public Green are located the city hall and free public library. New Haven is the seat of Yale University one of the foremost educational institutions of the country. It was chartered by the colonial general assembly of Connecticut as a collegiate school at Saybrook in 1701. It was named in 1718 after the removal of the institution to New Haven in honor of Elihu Yale (1648-1721) an early patron of the college, whose father was for some time a resident of New Haven. Among the more prominent buildings which are located on the university campus are Osborn Hall Dwight Hall College Library (with 900,000 volumes), Vanderbilt Dormitory and the Art School. Other institutions or buildings of the university are the Peabody Museum of Natural History (with an exceptionally important collection of fossil remains) the Sheffield Scientific School, with chemical, physical, mining, engineering, and biological laboratories, the observatory and the school of forestry. The attendance at the university in 1904-05 was nearly 3000. Among the other educational institutions of the city may be mentioned the Hopkins Grammar School founded in 1800 Boardman Manual Training School Hillhouse High School and a state normal school. The city is the seat of several learned societies—the Connecticut Academy of Sciences, New Haven Historical Society etc. In the Old Burial Ground of Grove Street are the graves of Samuel F. B. Morse, Noah Webster Timothy Dwight, Eli Whitney Theodore Winthrop, Benjamin Silliman James D. Dana, William D. Whitney and other distinguished men of the city. New Haven has a large inland and coast-wise commerce besides a considerable foreign trade carried on both direct and through New York. It has several hundred manufacturing establishments producing fire-arms, iron and edge tools, wire goods, carriages, clocks, hardware, rubber goods, ornate musical instruments, pulp and paper etc. The city has also slaughtering and packing industries.

New Haven was settled in 1637 by a company from London led by John Davenport, a Puritan pastor and Theophilus Eaton. It became the capital of the Independent colony of New Haven which was united with the Connecticut colony in 1665 under the charter of 1662. It was the semi-capital of Connecticut from 1701 until 1873 when Hartford was made the sole capital. Part of New Haven was chartered as a city in 1784. In 1840 the township (town) in 1820 10,678. in 1840 14,390. in 1850 22,529. of whom 20,741 resided within the city. In 1860 (the town and city having been made coextensive) the number of inhabitants was 59,267. in 1870 50,840. in 1880 62,862. in 1890 81,298. in 1900 105,027.

New Jersey, one of the Middle Atlantic States of the American Union bounded NE by New York E by New York and the Atlantic Ocean S by the Atlantic Ocean and Delaware Bay and W by Delaware and Pennsylvania. From New York it is separated in part, by the Hudson River New York Bay Staten Island Sound and Raritan Bay and the Delaware River and its estuary wash the entire western border. It extends 167 miles N and S from lat 38° 56' to 41° 21' N. Area, of the land surface 7625 sq. mi. of the appertaining waters, 290 sq. mi.

Face of the Country—In its physiographic aspect the state of New Jersey is properly divisible into two sections,—a northern and a southern—the features of which are widely different. In the NW the Blue (or Kittatinny) and the Highland (known in parts as Schooley Mountain) ranges of mountains with the intermontane and highly fertile Kittatinny Valley traverse the state. These mountains nowhere exceed 1800 feet in altitude. Footwardward lies a wide plateau broken by low ridges, called mountains (Orange Mountain Springfield Mountain) which are more or less continuous with or run parallel to the Palisades of the Hudson River. Adjoining this is an undulating lowland descending to sea-level and in part occupied by marshes and oceanic everflows (Hackensack Valley). The remaining three-fifths of the state, lying southward from a line running from Trenton to Raritan Bay is a very level tract nowhere exceeding 400 ft. in height the Atlantic Highlands (or Navesink Hills) being the principal elevation. High Point in the extreme N end close to the boundaries of New York and Pennsylvania, has an elevation of 1860 ft. Mount Tammany at the Delaware Water Gap rises to 1420 ft. Much of the southern part of New Jersey is very sandy and bears unmistakable evidence of having emerged peacefully from the sea and of having undergone little disturbing change since that time (Cretaceous, Tertiary).

Rivers Coast-Line Navigation etc.—Besides the Hudson and Delaware, the principal streams are the Wallkill Hackensack Passaic Raritan Shark Manasquan Metedeosk, Toms, Little Egg Harbor Great Egg Harbor Tuckahoe, Maurice Cohoes Rancocas Millstone Musconetcong and Paulinskill rivers. Of these a number in the lower part of the state are navigable tidal streams, which with the 'thoroughfares', or navigable channels in the salt-marshes afford considerable extent of inland navigation. This is increased by the canals of the state, of which the chief are the Morris Canal and the Delaware and Raritan canal now almost in a condition of disuse. The latter canal is a channel of direct water communication between New York and Philadelphia. Along the eastern coast there is a series of bays and sounds fenced from the open sea by long spits of sand broken by inlets through some of which small vessels can pass. Among these are the Shark River Wreck Pond, Manasquan Barnegat, Egg Harbor New Brigantine, Absecon, Townsend, Herford, Turtle Gut, and Cold Spring inlets.

Places of Interest to Tourists—Among these are the Delaware Water Gap the Palisades of the Hudson River (a vast and strikingly picturesque basaltic ridge rising to 400-475 feet) the Fawcett Falls at Paterson lakes Hopatcong and Greenwood, the sea-bathing resorts at Cape May Atlantic City Long Beach Deal Manasquan Barnegat Tuckerton and other places on the coast, Lakewood, etc.

Geology, Minerals, etc.—In the NW the Silurian and Devonian formations prevail, and among their economic resources are abundant and excellent roofing-slates and building and flag-stones, including magnesian limestone, used by both the lime-burner and the stone-cutter. Rich hematites are also abundant here. The Highlands are of Achaean rocks and afford zinc-ores, franklinite, galena, and abundant magnetite iron-ores (product of the magnetite iron-ores of the state in 1903 484,796 long tons). Southeastward of the Highlands comes a Triassic plateau much broken by trap dikes and affording copper-ores, red sandstones for building uses, etc. Passing southward, we next encounter a belt of the Cretaceous, which like the preceding formations, extends from NE to SW across the state. It affords the valuable greensand marl, formerly much employed as a fertilizer and in beds of moulding-sand, brackish and fossiliferous are highly important. A line drawn from Salem to Long Branch would somewhat roughly define the SE. border of the Cretaceous. The remainder of the state is of the Tertiary and Quaternary ages and its useful minerals are peat, bog iron ore, and glass-sand. Glacial gravels cover a large portion of the southern section of the state while a terminal moraine, marking the limit to the advance of the great northern ice-sheet of the Glacial Period, extends across the state from a point opposite Staten Island to Belvidere on the Delaware.

Climate.—New Jersey enjoys on the whole a healthful climate, which is considerably influenced by proximity to the ocean but there are stretches where malarial fevers prevail. The average summer temperature is about 67° in the N and 75° in the S and there is a corresponding difference in the winter temperatures of the two sections (25° and 34°). The mean annual rainfall is between 42 and 50 inches.

Agriculture.—The Kittatinny Valley and the Triassic and Cretaceous belts of the state are among the finest agricultural lands in the Union and the light sandy Tertiary soils, when dressed judiciously with fertilizers have been cultivated with success. The pine region in the S otherwise unproductive, has been found well adapted to the raising of grapes and small fruits for market. Market-gardening, truck farming and commercial floriculture are extensively carried on near New York and Philadelphia. The value of the vegetable product in 1900 was $3,400,000 and horticulture yielded nearly $2,000,000. Several million dollars worth of cranberries are sometimes produced in a year chiefly in the marsh region near the coast, and probably one-half of all the cranberries consumed in the United States comes from this region. Apples, cider pears, peaches, blackberries, raspberries, and strawberries are important products. The chief agricultural products in 1900 were corn 8,493,012 bushels, oats, 2,812,939 bushels, wheat, 2,344,082 bushels, potatoes, 3,342,015 bushels and hay 499,102 tons. The sales of milk, butter, wool, hops, tobacco, grain, flower garden and flower-seeds and nursery trees and plants are of large aggregate value.

Manufactures.—New Jersey favored by its easy communication with the Pennsylvania coal region and the great markets of the North and by the amplitude of its water power has become one of the leading states in the Union in its manufactures. It ranks first among the states of the Union in the manufacture of silk and silk goods (chiefly on the Paterson) second in the production of pottery (Trenton), and stands well in the front in the manufacture of textiles, boots and shoes, electrical appliances, iron and steel, sewing machines, locomotives, cars, trunks, general hardware, glass chemicals, paints, india-rubber, carpets, machinery of all classes, leather and leather goods, etc. The values of the products of the chief industries in 1900 were: textiles of all classes, $72,921,528; foundry and machine-shop products, $32,621,230; iron and steel, $24,751,099; refined petroleum, $29,649,460; malted liquors, $14,358,450; leather and leather goods, $13,757,150; chemicals, $12,207,239; pottery, $8,940,723; electrical apparatus, $8,447,184; sewing machines, $6,643,348; rubber goods, $8,458,274; glass, $5,083,822; and tobacco, $7,738,379. Extensive ship-building yards have been established on the Delaware River and at Elizabeth (Elizabethport) and there are large dyeing establishments and bleacheries. There were in 1899 961 manufactories of cigars and tobacco whose output was 35,032,655 cigars, 484,950 cigarettes, and 15,601,278 pounds of smoking plug and fine-cut tobacco.

Fisheries.—The fisheries of the state include deep-sea fishing, the oyster-trade, the taking of shad, bass, sturgeon, etc. in the rivers, and the capture of menhaden and other fish for oil and fish guano. The state has done much for the furthering of the fresh water fisheries and the Delaware has been very successfully stocked with black bass. Small menhaden are packed in oil in this state and sold for sardines. The anchovy abounds in the waters of New Jersey.

The bluefish, sheepshead, and Spanish mackerel are among the highly prized food-fishes extensively caught here. The value of the oyster-catch has in some years reached nearly $1,800,000.

Railroads.—In 1839 there were 14 miles of road in operation. In 1850 there were 318 miles; in 1860 580 miles; in 1870 1123 miles; in 1880 1684 miles; in 1890 2063 miles; and in 1900 2257 miles.

Education.—The highest seat of learning is Princeton University, located at Princeton which is one of the leading educational centres of the United States and with which is affiliated the Theological Seminary of the Presbyterian Church. Other important institutions are Rutgers College, at New Brunswick, Stevens Institute of Technology at Hoboken, Seton Hall College, at South Orange and Drew Theological Seminary at Madison. The state normal school is located at Trenton.

The counties number 21, as follows: Atlantic, Bergen, Burlington, Camden, Cape May, Cumberland, Essex, Glen, Gloucester, Hudson, Hunterdon, Mercer, Middlesex, Monmouth, Morris, Ocean, Passaic, Salem, Somerset, Sussex, Union and Warren.

The principal cities and towns are Trenton, the capital (pop. in 1900 73,307), Newark, the most populous town (245,810), Jersey City (200,433), Paterson (105,171), Camden (70,935), Hoboken (59,304), Elizabeth (52,130), Bayonne (32,722), Atlantic City (27,838), Passaic (27,777), Orange (24,141), East Orange (21,565) and New Brunswick (20,068). In the summer season many of the sea-side resorts are populous places, and thriving suburbs are numerous in the vicinity of the larger cities.

Constitution, etc.—The governor is chosen every 3 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives. The members of the former are elected for a term of 3 years and those of the latter for 1 year. The state has 10 representatives in the lower house of the national Congress.

The population in 1703 was estimated at 40,900. In 1700 it was 164,130. In 1800 211,140. In 1810 245,562. In 1820 277,426. In 1830 320,823. In 1840 375,300. In 1850 459,600. In 1860 672,035. In 1870 900,094. In 1880 1,131,110. In 1890 1,444,933. and in 1900 1,683,060. The foreign born population in 1900 was 431,834.

History.—The Dutch settled at Bergen before 1620 the region being regarded as part of New Netherland. Soon after some Swedes settled on the lower Delaware, regarding the country as a part of their province of New Sweden. They were dispossessed in 1656 by Peter Stuyvesant. In 1604 New Netherland passed to the English. The duke of York (the future James II.) immediately made over the portion included in the present New Jersey to Lord Berkeley and Sir George Carteret. The province was named New Jersey from the island of Jersey of which Carteret had been an administrator. In 1666 the province was divided into West New Jersey and East New Jersey, the former holding under a Quaker proprietorship and the latter the property of Carteret. West New Jersey was soon sold to William Penn who in 1682 purchased East New Jersey also. In 1702 the government of both colonies was transferred to the crown, the two being united. Down to 1789 the governor of New York was also governor of New Jersey (which had its separate assembly). New Jersey was one of the thirteen original states (1776) and was an important theatre of war in the revolutionary struggle.

New Mexico, a southwestern territory of the United States bounded N by Colorado, E by Oklahoma and Texas, S by Texas and Mexico and W by Arizona. It lies between lat. 31° 20' and 32° 30' N. and between lon. 103° and 109° W. Area 122,460 sq. mi.

Face of the Country—New Mexico is a region of high plateaus having an altitude of from 4000 to 6000 feet and a general southward inclination. These are traversed by mountain ridges and a bearing many isolated peaks some of the mountains attaining a height of more than 12,000 ft. and towering above the line of perpetual snow especially northward. The Sierra Blanca, in the S, attains an elevation of 14,260 ft. and Guadalupe Mountain 13,150 ft. In the E the territory takes in a part of the sterile and treeless Llano Estacado (or Staked Plain). The most noteworthy mountains, which are largely of the talus or mass character are the Front Range or main chain of the Rocky Mountains the San Andres Osoreo and Organ Mountains, Y of the Rio Grande the Guadalupe Mountains in the NE, the Kato Monalms in the NE, the Chusca Mountains in the NW and the Zuni Detrital San Francisco, Mimbres, Yagollon and Pecos mountains in the W and SW. The Continental Divide is found in the western third of the state, a portion of which is occupied by the Zuni Plateau. The valleys are usually somewhat level and often very fertile when irrigated, but the climate is very dry and in the more elevated parts the winter cold is severe. The territory is remarkably beautiful and its bright skies and clear air are praised by every tourist. The mean annual temperature at Santa Fe is about 50°, the mean of the warmest month being 70° and of the coldest 30°. A maximum temperature of 115°-120° has been recorded. The average annual rainfall is about 15 inches.

Rivers—The Rio Grande and its tributaries—the Pecos in the E and the Puerco in the W—drain the greater part of New Mexico but in the E there is a large tract which is within the Mississippi Valley and is drained principally by the Canadian River. In the SW rise the Gila and the Mimbres and far to the N flow the Rio Colorado and the head-streams of the Little Colorado. The streams are not large and are useful chiefly as supplying water for irrigation and for mining purposes.

Geology—New Mexico is largely covered by the Jurassic and Cretaceous deposits carrying varying patches of the Tertiary but the mountain ranges of granite and porphyry at the time of their elevation have been fitted with them and upheaved masses of the more ancient limestones.

and mandstones. The Carboniferous area enters in the S. and SE. The outlying mesas (or small table-lands) are generally of a lignitic or sandstone. The mineral wealth of the territory is great. Both placer and quartz gold, as well as rich deposits of silver, copper, iron and lead are extensively mined. Mercury, tin and manganese also exist. The coal of New Mexico is chiefly of a bituminous character but anthracite is also found and there are large deposits of serviceable lignite. The production of coal in 1907 was 1,541,781 tons of gold 13,043 fine ounces of silver 202,000 fine ounces and of copper 7,300,832 pounds. The precious minerals include the emerald and turquoise. Saline basins are frequent and afford a supply of good salt. The territory has many lava beds and thermal and mineral springs.

Veg. and Agr. situ e.—In the mountains of the N. there is a generous supply of pine, piñon, cedar, spruce and juniper timber. In the S. grow walnut, oak, cottonwood, plane, mesquite, ebony and other rare woods but here the timber is nowhere abundant and some large districts are woodless. The grama (Chaetochloa and B. v. l. l.) mesquite (Acacia) and bunch grasses afford rich pasturage. One of the mesquite trees affords a valuable gum, much like gum arabic and its sugary pods and bean-like seeds are eaten by man and beast. Stock raising particularly wool-growing, has long been the leading pursuit of the New Mexicans. The number of sheep registered in the stock holdings for 1900 was 3,331,743. The opium, peach, melon, apricot, pomegranate, and fig do well the three latter especially so. The European vine grows here in the open air and the wines of New Mexico are reputed to have peculiarly rich and generous qualities, but these have not largely reached the general market. For agriculture and gardening irrigation is necessary and large canals leading from the streams to the farm-lands have been constructed. The length of irrigation ditches in 1899 was 2,382 miles. The total area of the territory under farms (agricultural and stock) in 1900 was 5,138,878 acres. The chief agricultural crops in 1900 were wheat 1,947,47 bushels, corn 554,752 bushels, oats 229,094 bushels, potatoes, 16,544 bushels and hay 77,141 tons. The amount of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool clip was 16,093,424 pounds.

Manufactures.—The principal manufacturing industries are the milling of grain and of metalliferous quartz and the sawing of lumber. The Navajo Indians make blankets of surprising excellence, and the inhabitants of the pueblos make and sell much coarse pottery, while among the Spanish-Americans there are ingenious domestic manufacturers. There are extensive wool-scouring establishments.

Commerce.—Santa Fé was long the objective point of a lucrative but hazardous overland trade, carried on mainly by caravan or wagon trains from Independence Mo. across the wide plains then for 300 leagues without inhabitants save the hostile red man. But with the approach of railroads this adventurous commerce was displaced by newer and more expeditious methods of transportation. Prior to 1878 New Mexico had no railroads but the territory is now traversed by several transcontinental lines. In 1900 there were 1758 miles of railroad.

The counties in 1900 were 16.—viz. Bernalillo, Chaves, Colfax, Dona Ana, Eddy, Grant, Guadalupe, Lincoln, Mora, Otero, Rio Arriba, San Juan, San Miguel, Santa Fé, Sierra, Socorro, Taos, Union and Valencia. Newer counties, Leonard, Wood, Luna, McKinley, Quay, Roosevelt, Sandoval and Torrance have been established since the official census. The principal towns are Santa Fé, the capital (pop. in 1900, 8667), Albuquerque, 6238, Las Vegas, Roswell, Gallup, Silver City and Roswell. A prevailing building material in the towns is the adobe (or sun-dried brick) which here proves very durable. There are numerous inhabited pueblos (or villages of semi-civilized Indians) mostly towards the NW. Besides many ruined towns of the same type, the great and many-storied colonial buildings presenting a strongly marked and massive architectural character.

Education.—As early as 1822 provision was made by the Mexican authorities for elementary public instruction but the system was not effective, and after the acquisition by the United States no public schools were established before 1872. The Spanish language is still used in many of the schools. The more advanced educational institutions are the University of New Mexico at Albuquerque, the New Mexico College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts at Mesilla Park a school of mines at Socorro, the New Mexico Military Institute at Roswell and the Indian Industrial School at Santa Fé. The territorial normal school is at Silver City and New Mexico Normal University at Las Vegas. There are mission-schools among the Indians and a number of Roman Catholic parochial and higher schools.

Population.—About one-half of the people are of Mexican origin with a dash of the Indian blood, and speak the Spanish language. In 1850 the pop. was 61,847, in 1860, 65,510. In 1870 (after the setting off of large areas to Arizona and Colorado) 61,879 exclusive of the tribal Indians, who, in 1874, numbered 25,268, of whom about 10,000 were Pueblo Indians, citizens of the United States. In 1880 110,566. In 1890 163,693. In 1900, 195,310. In addition to the Pueblo, the Indians include Navajos, Apaches, Utes, etc. The Mexicans and Pueblo Indians are Roman Catholics. The majority of the tribal Indians have not been christianized. They are making good progress in civilization.

History.—New Mexico was visited by Spaniards as early as 1534. The Spanish conquest was effected before the close of the century. Santa Fé was founded in the early years of the seventeenth century. The early settlers found many of the natives living as at present, in a semi-civilized way wearing cotton garments of their own weaving, manufacturing good pottery and building enormous communal houses (or casa grande), but having almost no knowledge of the use of metals. In 1846 the United States troops under Kearney occupied New Mexico, which was surrendered by Mexico in the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo in 1848. It then included the greater part of the present Arizona and part of the present Nevada and of Colorado. The territorial government was organized in 1850 and inaugurated in 1861. In 1853 a large strip was added in the E. by the Gadsden purchase. Arizona was set off in 1863, and in 1867 a section in the NE was annexed to Colorado.

New Orleans, or louisiana (Fr. Nouvelle-Orléans non vll on l'ile) a city and port of entry of the state of Louisiana, the capital of Orleans parish and the commercial metropolis of the Gulf States is situated on the Mississippi River 166 miles above its mouth in the Gulf of Mexico. It is 141 miles W by S of Mobile, Ala., on the Southern Pacific, the Texas and Pacific the Illinois Central and other railroads. Lat. 29° 26' N. Long. 90° 5' W.

The main portion of the city is on the left bank of the Mississippi. The older part was built upon this side following a bend of the river which gave it a crescent shape, whence its popular sobriquet, the Crescent City. Later its growth up the river following an upward curve of the stream changed the form of the city nearly to that of an S. But the city has been enlarged so that its present territory area is nearly 200 sq. m. its territory being continuous with that of Orleans parish and extending as far as Lake Pontchartrain. A large part of the land, however, is un reclaimed marsh while much of that which has been drained is unimproved in the way of building, so that the actual city whose corporate limits include the municipal suburb of Algiers covers less than 40 sq. m. A considerable portion of the city is below high water level of the river. To protect it from the annual inundations which would otherwise be inevitable, there has been constructed a high, broad embankment, or levee, extending along the city front and for a long distance up and down the river and a similar levee has been built along and around the lake shores. The river levees are 15 feet wide and 14 ft. high, and are finished along the top so as to furnish a delightful promenade in favorable weather. The levees of the city level renders drainage difficult and costly the usual methods being impracticable, recourse has been had to a system of street canals, with powerful steam-pumps to raise and expel into Lake Pontchartrain all refuse water, sewage, and scum. The river opposite New Orleans is 1-1/2 mile wide with a ship-channel of about 30 ft. depth, and is for many miles lined with docks and piers. One of the largest floating dry docks in the world has been constructed here. The city is connected with nearly all the important ports of the world by direct steamship lines.

New Orleans is not notable as a whole for either the beauty or the grandeur of its architecture, a fact which makes more conspicuous the few really handsome and imposing edifices. The retention of the old French and Spanish houses, with their quaint architecture and softening colors, gives to the older quarters a picturesque aspect, to which the numerous gardens, decked with flowers of many kinds, shaded with forest trees, and enlivened with the song of various birds, many of them of bright plumage, add an exotic flavor which is unknown in any of the larger American cities. In the original (or French) city known as the Vieux Carré the streets with few exceptions, are narrow, generally not exceeding 40 feet in width, but those of the portion distinguished as the American city are broad and exceedingly handsome thoroughfares. Canal Street is the main business street, especially for the retail trade, and is a favorite promenade. In the old quarter the most notable street is Esplanade Avenue. Among the important buildings of a more or less public character are the Federal building, the new court-house, cotton exchange, city hall, charity hospital, Howard Library, Tilton Memorial Library, public library (with 120,000 volumes), the produce and sugar exchanges, Odd-Fellows hall, the Cathedral of St. Louis, the old Spanish city hall or Cabildo (now the building of the supreme court), and the archiepiscopal palace, one of the oldest buildings in the Mississippi Valley. Tulane University, the leading educational institution of the city, was founded in 1884 and was attended in 1900-01 by 1150 students. It has departments of medicine, law, arts and science, and technology. Other collegiate institutions are the Ursuline Academy, the Jesuit College and the New Orleans, Leland Southern and Straight Universities, the last four for colored. Among the open places of the city are Jackson Square (the old Place d'Armes), Lafayette Square and Lee Circle. The French Market is one of the sights of local flavor. The largest of the municipal parks are City Park and Audubon Park, the latter covering 250 acres.

New Orleans is the largest cotton market of the world, excepting Liverpool and handles about 2,000,000 bales annually. As the outlet of the vast Mississippi Valley it commands a large domestic and foreign export trade, its more important shipments in addition to cotton comprising wool, sugar, rice, lumber, hides, grain, and tobacco. It imports large quantities of tropical fruits. The manufactured products of the city amount in a year to about $50,000,000 including machinery, cotton goods, boots and shoes, beer, cigars, etc.

New Orleans was settled by the French in 1718 and was named in honor of the regent, the duke of Orleans. A few years later it was made the capital of the colony of Louisiana. In 1785 it had a population of 4700. In 1788 a large part of the town was destroyed by a conflagration. In 1794 the first newspaper called Le Moniteur was published. New Orleans became a possession of Spain in 1763, was re-conveyed to the French in 1800 and passed to the United States in the purchase of Louisiana in 1803, at which time it contained a population of about 8000. The town was designated as the seat of the monarchy intended to here been established by the treaty of Aaron Burr. In 1804 it was made a port of entry and the next year it was incorporated as a city. In 1830 the population had increased to 17,242. On January 8, 1815 the British under General Pakenham made an attack on the city and were magnificently defeated by the Americans under General Jackson. During the Civil War New Orleans was the seat of active military and naval operations. In April 1862, Farragut bombarded and passed the Mississippi forts (Jackson and St. Philip) and on May 1 General Butler took formal possession of the city. Pop. in 1820 27,175, in 1830 48,510, in 1840 102,193, in 1850 128,375, in 1860 168,675, in 1870 191,418, in 1880 210,000, in 1890 242,070, in 1900 287,104. Average temperature of the year 69° maximum temperature, 101°. The annual rainfall is about 55 inches.

of the city. Fort Wolcott, with a United States torpedo-station is on Goat Island. The climate of Newport is commended for its mildness and equability. Its balmy atmosphere, varied scenery and fine facilities for bathing and boating have rendered it the most fashionable watering place in the United States. Many wealthy citizens of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and elsewhere have erected cottages and palatial villas here, some of which are almost unsurpassed for their luxurious appointments and magnificent lawns. The city contains a state-house, a city hall (both dating back to about the middle of the eighteenth century), an academy of music, a synagogue (1762 said to be one of the oldest in the United States), public libraries, among the Newport Reading Room, Trinity Church in which the eminent philosopher Berkeley preached about 1730, the Redwood Library which has about 50,000 volumes and many paintings, and Touro Park in which stands an old building called the Round Tower (or Old Stone Mill) formerly supposed by many to have been built by the Northmen. The famous Cliff Walk on which are many of the finest private mansions, follows the brow of the cliffs for about 3 miles. Another recreation course is the 10 mile Ocean Drive. Other places or points of interest in or about Newport are the U. S. Naval Training Station and War College on Coaster Harbor Island, Naval Hospital, Lamson Rock Light-house, Eastons Beach, and the rock fortress known as Fort Mifflin. Newport has some manufactures. New South Wales, a British colony one of the states of Australia, having Queensland on the N. the Pacific Ocean on the E. Victoria on the S. and South Australia on the W. Area, 316,700 sq. m. The coast-line extends about 750 miles in a generally NNE direction from Cape Howe to Point Danger. The Murray River and one or two of its tributaries form the principal portion of its southern limit, and its northern boundary follows the McIntyre River to a point on the 20th parallel of S lat. which parallel it follows westward to the 141st degree of E lon which meridian is the W boundary of the state.

Physical Aspect.—A range of rugged mountains—the Australian Alps—runs N and S. at a distance of from 25 to 120 miles from the sea, with numerous lateral spurs. This range, which forms part of the great Eastern Cordillera of Australia and is commonly or collectively designated the Great Dividing Range (or Ophian) is known in its different parts as the New England Range (in the N), the Liverpool Range, the Blue Mountains (W of Sydney) and the Murrumbidgee Range, the last near the borders of Victoria. culminating in Mount Kosciuszko (about 7300 feet) the loftiest point of the Australian continent. The mountains are in great part broken through by rugged gorges and cañons. The coastal strip E of these mountains is generally fertile and fairly well watered, numerous streams descending from the mountain slopes. On the inner (or western) side of the mountains the region is largely one of elevated plains and plateaus—a pastoral country of droughts and floods in which semi-desert conditions are here and there emphasized. Most of the streams are dry during a considerable part of the year. The principal rivers in addition to the Murrumbidgee are the Darling and the Murrumbidgee (with its tributary the Lockhart) both of them tributaries of the Murray. They with their tributaries afford hundreds of miles of navigable waters.

Climate, Vegetation, Fauna.—The climate of New South Wales is on the whole not unhealthy. There are no severe frosts and snow is unknown. At Sydney the average annual temperature is 65°. In the interior a shade temperature of 125°-135° is not absolutely infrequent. The rainfall is the coastal districts varies from 30 to 75 inches but over a considerable part of the interior it is reduced to 10 inches or less. The great plains are fairly well wooded open forests of eucalyptus and the mallee scrub giving the dominant aspect to the vegetation. In the E the valleys produce a rich association of timber trees (oak, pine, cedar, poplar, ash) and European fruits and flowering plants have been extensively introduced. Thorny and burr plants are remarkably abundant. The indigenous mammalian life is represented characteristically by the monotremes and marsupials (See AUSTRALIA). Birds are exceedingly numerous, many of them noted for their magnificent plumage. Among the types may be enumerated the parrot, paroquet, lorikeet, laughing jackass (a kingfisher), the lyre-bird, bower bird, various ground-doves and the sacroalbatrus. The camel has been acclimatized in some parts of the Darling region. The rabbit has developed so enormously as to be a hindrance and menace to pastoral pursuits.

Agriculture and Pastoral Resources.—Much of the soil is well adapted to cultivation. The principal products are wheat, Indian corn, barley, oats, potatoes, lucerne and other grasses, arrowroot, sugar-cane, tobacco, wine, brandy and table grapes. Useful native fibres, kino, gum, and tannin bark are collected. Cotton, silk, raisins, and tropical and other fruits (including oranges) are also produced. For the warm and equable climate of the northern interior tracts is adapted to the growth of tropical products as well as those of the temperate zone. There were in 1901-02 upward of 2,200,000 acres under crop while one-fourth of the state is still forested. The great wealth of the country consists in its flocks and herds, supported by rich native grasses. There were in the state at the close of 1901 41,838,000 sheep, 2,046,350 horned cattle, 480,358 horses, and 285,454 pigs. In prosperous years upward of 250,000,000 pounds of wool are exported. Live-stock, masts, leather, hides, tallow and tallow are also exported.

Mineral Wealth.—The mineral resources of the state comprise gold, silver, copper, iron, tin, antimony, coal and many precious minerals including the diamond. In 1901 the value of the gold product was $921,283, silver (pure) $50,484, silver lead ore $1,803,978, copper $412,292. In the same year there were 95 coal-mines in operation yielding a product of 5,968,429 tons valued at £1,178,929.

Manufactures. include food-materials and products of various kinds, wines, beer, brandies, leather, textiles, soap, candles, silk, timber, furniture, carriages, cheese, earthenware, etc. Ship-building and the making of machines and metallic ware are carried on to a considerable extent. There are over 3000 miles of railway in the state.

Governance, etc.—The affairs of the state are administered by a governor who is also commander-in-chief of all the troops of the state and by a parliament of two houses—the legislative council and the legislative assembly. In the exercise of the executive power the governor is assisted by a cabinet of 7 ministers. Sydney, the principal port of the state, is the capital. The Church of England is governed by a metropolitan who is archbishop of Sydney and primate of Australia and Tasmania. At the head of the educational institutions is the University of Sydney, which receives about $600,000 a year from the government. Pop. of the state estimated in June, 1903 1,896,800. One-third of the inhabitants reside in Sydney and its suburbs. The aborigines number only about 4000.

The country was visited and named by Cook in 1770. It was settled in 1788 as a convict colony ceasing to be such in 1859. It included Victoria until 1851 and Queensland until 1859. Gold was first discovered here in 1851. In 1901 New South Wales became one of the states of the Commonwealth of Australia.

New York (Sp. Nueva York, and rd York Ger. Niurk, not ork; L. Nova Eboracum) a North Atlantic state of the American Union bordering on the SB upon the Atlantic Ocean and bounded on the W. NW and N by Lake Erie, the Niagara River, Lake Ontario and Canada, from which last it is partly separated by the St. Lawrence River. N by Vermont (from which it is partly separated by Lake Champlain) Massachusetts, and Connecticut and S by New Jersey and Pennsylvania. The 43d parallel of N latitude forms part of the extreme northern boundary. The southernmost point is in lat. $40^{\circ} 38' N$. The state limits include Long and Staten islands and the jurisdiction of this state covers Long Island Sound and the lower waters of the Hudson to low water mark on the New Jersey side.

Besides Long and Staten islands may be enumerated Manhattan, Governor's, Bedlow's, Hart's, Randall's, Blackwell's, Ward's, Gardiner's, Plim, Shelter, Fisher's, Faulkner's, the Thimble, Barren, Fire, and other islands in tidal waters. Grand Goat, Beaver, Beekhorn, Cayuga, Squaw, Strawberry, Tonawanda, Rattlesnake, and other islands in the Niagara River, many of the Thousand Islands and others in the St. Lawrence and in Lake Ontario and Crab, Schuyler and Volcano islands in Lake Champlain. Area of the land-surface, 47,620 sq. m. of the unwatering waters 1556 miles.

The face of the country is exceedingly varied, being largely mountainous in its major eastern and northern sections and of a plateau character in the center and west. The wilderness of the Adirondack Mountains occupies a considerable part of the state north of the Mohawk Valley and is still largely what its name signifies—a true wilder-ness. Hundreds of lakes, rivers, and ponds, with almost un-terminable connecting water ways, are scattered through an extensive area of rural primeval forest, justly famous for its grand and untamed nature. Here are located the culminat-ing summits of the state,—Tahawee (or Mount Marcy) 5345 feet, Mt. Cayuga, 5112 ft., Skylight 4220 ft., etc. The mountains of this group are of very ancient construction and are usually referred to the Laurentian period. Of nearly the same age is the range known as the Highlands of the Hudson which are approximately the most ancient of the Appalachian system of elevations, and represent the Blue Ridge of the states lying further south. Their highest point is Breakneck Mountain (Beacon Hill) 1535 ft. The Blue (or Kittatinny) Mountains of Pennsylvania and New Jersey are continued into New York as the Shawangunks (Ham's Point, upward of 2000 ft.). The wildly picturesque Catskills constitute another important mountain mass of the state, rising in their highest points to over 4000 ft. (Slide Mountain, 4205 ft. Hunter Mountain 4035 ft.). They form part of the great Alleghany Plateau and fall abruptly on their eastern face to the valley of the Hudson, as their westerly continuation the Helderberg Mountains falls to the depression of the Mohawk. Their rock constituents are chiefly sandstones and conglomerates of Devonian and sub Carboniferous age, and may be said to represent the main mass of the Alleghany system. Forming the greater part of the boundary with Connecticut and Massachusetts is the Taconic Range, a member of the Green Mountain system. The plateau region of west-central New York, whose waters flow into the Great Lakes, is a very beautiful and fertile region characterized by the presence of a remarkable series of long, deep, and narrow lakes, but southward of the water-shed the plateau has been cut by denudation into an irregular succession of ridges and valleys. See Adirondack Mountains, Catskill Mountains, Highlands, etc.

Hydrography.—New York is abundantly supplied with bounding water ways and internal rivers, a circumstance to which was largely due its initial commercial development. The upper and lower New York bays,—on the former of which is situated the city of New York,—together constitute one of the most spacious harbors in the United States, their capacity being largely augmented by the deep and admirable harbor facilities afforded by the West and North (or Hudson) rivers. Sag Harbor, Greenport, Port Jefferson, Poughkeeps, and the Hudson River cities are ports on tidal waters. Dunkirk, Buffalo, and Niagara Falls on Lake Erie and the Niagara River, Charlotte, Fairhaven, and Oswego on Lake Ontario, Rochester on the Genesee, Cape Vincent and Ogdensburg on the St. Lawrence, and Plattsburg and Whitehall on Lake Champlain, are the important lake and river ports of the interior. The principal rivers of the state are the Hudson and St. Lawrence, both important commercial arteries; the Mohawk, an affluent of the Hudson affording extensive water-power at Cohoes and Little Falls; the Oswego which discharges into Lake Ontario the waters of the navigable lakes Canandaigua, Seneca, Cayuga, Oneida, Skaneateles, Cross Oneida, Otisco, Cassenovia, and Onondaga; the Genesee, Alleghany and Susquehanna, with its main tributaries, the Charlotte, Chenango, Chenango, and Unadilla, the Delaware and its branches the Black, Oriskany, Otisco, Rensselaer, Chazy, Saranac, and Ausable, which are important streams of the N and NE, and the Walkill River a tributary of the Hudson. Besides the lakes already mentioned there are innumerable other lakes, large and small scattered over almost every part of the state. Of these we may name as especially noteworthy lakes Chautauque (in the extreme W.) Cataraugus, Hemlock, Hemlock, the Green Lakes, Lake Oswego (one of the sources of the Susquehanna River) Schuyler, Schenck, George (SE of the Adirondack region and famous for its magnificent scenery) Placid, Upper and Lower Saranac, Upper and Lower Ausable, Pleasant, Pisco, etc. many of them favorite resorts for the angler and the summer tourist. Their rivers and creeks of the state have long furnished much and unusually constant water power and the Niagara waters are to-day the greatest natural generator of power which has been put to the service of man.

Canals.—This state owns and has in operation canals and navigable feeders with an aggregate length of many hundreds of miles. Of these the Erie, from Buffalo to Albany and the Champlain from West Troy to Whitehall are by far the most important. These canals are extremely serviceable in moving grain, coal, lumber and other heavy and bulky freight, but the competition of railroads has greatly diminished their importance. A project is now on foot to reconstruct the Erie Canal so as to enable barges of 1000 tons to navigate it. The tonnage on the state canals in 1900 was 2,250,000 tons.

Geology and Mineral Resources.—Constructionally the state may be said to belong entirely to the Archean and Paleozoic periods, the rock masses beautifully illustrating almost the entire series from the Laurentian to the sub-Carboniferous. No unquestionable marine deposits, except in Long Island (Cretaceous) occur of later date than the latter. There are no coal bearing strata in the state. A belt of Triassic (Suvo-marine?) deposits cut by trap intrusions, occurs in the SE a continuation of the more extensive series of like character developed in New Jersey. A large part of the state is covered with glacial drift and much of its present physiographic aspect—its interior lake waterfalls (Niagara) etc.—dates from the Glacial period and is due to modulating by glacial ice. Much of Long Island is of moraine character. Westchester and St. Lawrence co. yield marble extensively and it is also obtained near Glens Falls (black) and Hudson and at many other points. The excellent iron-ore of the Clinton shales are largely mined and there are extensive beds of magnetite iron in the Champlain and Adirondack regions. The salt-works of Onondaga, Wyoming and Genesee co. give the state first position among the states of the Union as producers of this mineral. The production in 1904 was 8,600,000 barrels. The blue flagstones of the Hamilton group are largely quarried at Kingston and in its vicinity. Sandstone, limestone, and slate for hullers are obtained at many points. Lime cement (of which the state produces about one-half the product of the United States) and gypsum are extensively produced in the cement of Akron, Monticello, and Knickerbocker being of especial note. Natural gas and petroleum are found at various points of the western counties bordering on Pennsylvania. The yield of petroleum in 1903 was 1,182,978 barrels. The output of iron-ore (magnetite hematite, brown hematite and siliceous carbonate) in 1903 was 549,480 long tons. In 1890 the production of pig iron was 292,827 long tons. All the aluminum produced in the United States in 1903 was turned out at the plants established at Niagara Falls and Massena Springs.

Climate.—The climate of New York presents the usual extremes of summer heat and winter cold which belong to the northern tier of states generally. Throughout the greater part of the state the winter is cold is more intense and the snow fall is greater than in most New England districts of corresponding latitude; but there are fewer sudden and extreme changes. The mean annual temperature of the state is $48.5^{\circ} F$. An extreme summer temperature of 105° is occasionally registered in the southern tier of counties and in the west (New York city, Buffalo) while a winter extreme of -25° to -40° is not rare in the north. Even in the lower valley of the Hudson a temperature of —16° has been recorded. The only epidemic disease is an ordinarily mild type of malarial fever which prevails in many parts of the state, especially in autumn, as a whole the state is a remarkably healthful one. The rainfall is usually ample and rarely excessive (at New York city 43 inches per annum. In the Adirondacks, nearly 60 inches).

Agriculture.—More than half the area of New York is improved or cultivated land and, excepting the mountain ridges and the Laurentian wilderness of the N there is but little unproductive land in the state. The productive soils are of every variety of constitution but they mostly contain abundance of lime. The Mohawk Valley is renowned for its broom-corn and factory made cheese. Orange is for its butter (a staple product of the whole state). Orange, Dutchess, Putnam, Greene, Westchester and Rockland co. for milk. Long Island for market-gardens and for its eggs. The northern counties for potatoes and hay. Oneida, Chemung, and Steuben for tobacco. Madison, Ontario, Oneida, Otsego, and Schoharie for hops. Monroe and Orleans co. raise enormous quantities of white beans. The central lake valleys are especially adapted to grape-culture. The principal crops in 1900 were: corn 17,336,633 bushels, wheat 4,400,100 bushels, oats, 44,638,974 bushels, barley 3,751,924 bushels, rye, 3,189,185 bushels, buckwheat, 3,220,158 bushels, potatoes, 27,481,356 bushels, and hay 3,351,991 tons. In 1900 there were 1,501,688 dairy cows in the state and 1,064,781 other cattle. The wool-clip in the same year (washed and unwashed) was 4,914,528 pounds.

Manufactures.—New York ranks first among the states in the value of its manufactures, which are very varied and distributed throughout most parts of the state. The total value of the industrial products (including those re-used in the process of manufacture) in 1900 was $2,175,786,900. The values furnished by the leading industries in 1900 were: clothing $233,370,447; foundry and machine-shop products (exclusive of general iron work, iron and steel and cars) $98,636,517; textiles, $84,263,047; sugar and molasses (refining) $90,890,479; printing and publishing $95,233,951; slaughtering $57,451,203; liquors $58,282,253; tobacco and cigars $49,028,479; chemicals, $40,063,383; hosiery and knitted goods $35,888,048; flour and grain-mill products, $42,700,340; boots and shoes, $25,585,631; leather $23,205,091; electrical apparatus and supplies $22,095,024; cheese, butter and condensed milk (factory product) $86,037,868; lumber mill products, $29,754,207; paper and wood pulp $36,715,628; furniture, $23,645,246.

Commerce.—The ports of the state, together with the railroads which cross the state bound it into Canada, do a very large share of the import and export trade of the United States, the port of New York being by far the most important seat of commerce in this country or indeed, within the western hemisphere. A very large share of all goods exported from the country are shipped from and by far the larger part of the foreign imports enter this port, while its coasting trade is proportionally prominent. The state also does a large part of the lake-trade with the West and Northwest.

Fisheries.—Besides the whitefish, shad, and other lake and river fisheries, which are very important, the sea fisheries are quite extensive. Sag Harbor district employs numerous vessels in the cod and mackerel fisheries and Buffalo hauls lake fish to the value of hundreds of thousands of dollars. Still more extensive is the business of taking and rendering fish for oil and fish guano. Of this industry Long Island is a notable seat. Oyster planting is an important occupation on the waters near New York.

Railroads.—The first railroad was opened in 1831 and extended from Albany to Schoenewady 17 miles. In 1848 the state had 727 miles of railway. In 1850 1,361 miles. In 1855, 2,683 miles. In 1860 2,692 miles. In 1865 3,002 miles. In 1870 2,928 miles. In 1880 6,019 miles. In 1890 7,748 miles and in 1900 8,230 miles.

The counties are 61 in number, viz: Albany, Allegany, Broome, Cattaraugus, Cayuga, Chemung, Chenango, Clinton, Columbia, Cortland, Delaware, Dutchess, Erie, Essex, Franklin, Fulton, Genesee, Greene, Hamilton, Herkimer, Jefferson, Kings, Lewis, Livingston, Madison, Monroe, Montgomery, Nassau, New York, Niagara, Oneida, Onondaga, Ontario, Orange, Orleans, Oswego, Otsego, Putnam, Queens, Rensselaer, Richmond, Rockland, St. Lawrence, Saratoga, Schoenewady, Schoharie, Schuyler, Seneca, Steuben, Suffolk, Sullivan, Tazewell, Tompkins, Ulster, Warren, Washington, Wayne, Westchester, Wyoming, and Yates.

The principal cities and towns, with their population in 1900 are New York (of which Brooklyn has formed a part since 1898), 4,437,392; Buffalo, 335,387; Rochester, 183,669; Syracuse, 136,374; Albany the capital, 94,151; Troy 66,551; Utica, 66,363; Yonkers, 47,931; Binghamton, 36,547; Elmira, 35,073; Schoenewady 31,652; Auburn 30,346; Newburgh, 24,943; Kingston, 24,085; Poughkeepsie, 24,029; Cohoes 23,010 etc.

Government.—The governor and the principal state officers are chosen for a term of 2 years. The legislature consists of a senate and an assembly whose members are respectively chosen for 2 years and 1 year. The state sends 27 representatives to the lower house of the national Congress.

Public Institutions.—New York is abundantly supplied with public institutions, reformatories, asylums, penitentiaries, institutions for deaf mutes etc.—and it is hardly necessary in this place to more than mention the names of a few of the more prominent ones, such as the state prisons at Ossining (Sing Sing), Dannemora, and Auburn; the insane asylums at Buffalo, Poughkeepsie, Utica, Middletown, Binghamton, Ogdensburg etc. the reformatories at Ramapo Island, Elmira, Rye Brook and Bedford; blind asylums at Batavia etc.

Public schools are as was first in some measure provided for in 1795. The higher education of the state is supervised by the regents of the University of the State of New York, a corporation which does not dispense instruction but creates, supervises and visits colleges, academies and academical union schools and has power to confer the higher degrees as well as to conduct written examinations and to assemble the university convocation which embraces the officers of academies and colleges. The leading institutions of learning in the state are Columbia University, New York University, and other colleges of New York city (see New York city). Cornell University at Ithaca, the universities of Rochester, Syracuse, and Buffalo, Colgate University at Hamilton, Hamilton College at Geneva, Hamilton College at Clinton and Union College at Schoenewady, Vassar College at Poughkeepsie and Barnard College in the city of New York (affiliated with Columbia University) give the higher instruction to women. There are state normal schools in colleges at several of the larger cities and some of the minor interior towns.

The population in 1698 was 18,007. In 1703, 20,665. In 1723, 40,584. In 1731, 50,324. In 1737, 60,427. In 1749, 72,348. In 1756, 96,790. In 1771, 163,143. In 1790, 340,120. In 1800, 589,061. In 1810, 959,040. In 1820, 1,372,111. In 1830, 1,916,008. In 1840, 2,428,921. In 1850, 3,097,394. In 1860, 3,880,735. In 1870, 4,382,159. In 1880, 5,082,871. In 1890, 5,997,840. and in 1900, 7,238,012. Including 5518 Indians stationed on reservations. Besides the original Dutch, Walloon and English settlers, many Germans of the Palatinate early entered the province, very largely colonizing the Mohawk Valley. After the termination of the war of the Revolution and the seizure of the Indian lands, many thousands of farmers from Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont and Pennsylvania came and occupied the fertile lands of central and western New York. For many years there have been large occasions of immigrants from Ireland, Germany, Austria-Hungary, Russia, Italy, and other European countries, and from Canada, especially in the larger towns. The foreign-born population in 1900 numbered 1,900,425. About one-half of the total population of the state is concentrated within the limits of New York city.

History.—This region was once divided between Indian tribes of the Iroquois and Algonquian stocks, the Five Nations of the Iroquois (who were afterwards joined by a sixth nation) being the most powerful tribes. In 1609 Henry Hudson, an English commander in the service of the Dutch East India Company, explored New York Bay and the Hudson River and named the country New Netherland. In the same year Lake Champlain was discovered by the French explorer whose name it bears. About 1613 the Dutch began establishing trading posts on Manhattan Island, where the town of New Amsterdam (New York) soon grew up. Through the agency of the Dutch West India Company founded in 1621 the immigration became fairly brisk, the settlements extending from Long Island to the head of navigation on the Hudson. In 1664 the English, during a time of peace, took from the possession of the then flourishing colony and gave it the name of New York in honor of the duke of York (the future James II.) who had received a patent for the country from his brother Charles II. The Dutch authority was afterwards for a short time restored (1673-74). The northern colonists suffered much during the French and Indian wars of the colonial period but were powerfully defended by the Iroquois who, however, assisted the British in the Revolutionary struggle. New York witnessed many of the most stirring events of the war for independence and was the last portion of the great battle-ground to be relinquished by the British. The national independence and the return of peace were followed by vexatious questions of jurisdiction between the state, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts, but the creation of the Green Mountain region into a new state (Vermont) and the relinquishment by Massachusetts of all claims in western New York except the right of soil put an amicable end to both difficulties. Slavery was abolished in 1817. In 1825 the Erie Canal was opened. The present constitution is a revision made in 1894, of the constitution of 1846.

New York, a county in the SE part of New York within the limits of the city of New York is bounded on the W by the Hudson River and on the E by the East River. It comprises Manhattan Island, which is about 13 miles long several lesser islands namely Blackwell's, Ward's, Randall's Governor's Bedloe's and Ellis, and a portion of the main land. Area, 63 sq m. Pop. in 1890 1,513,301. In 1900 2,050,000.

New York, the commercial metropolis of the state of New York and of the United States, and the most populous and important city of the western hemisphere ranking second among the cities of the world. It was until 1898 situated chiefly upon Manhattan Island which extends from the junction of the East River (a tidal channel connecting Upper New York Bay with Long Island Sound) and the Hudson up the latter 14 miles and along the former about 8 miles being separated from the main-land by the Harlem River a navigable tidal waterway about 6 miles long and Spuyten Duyvil Creek. This island has an average breadth of 1 1/2 miles. In addition to Manhattan Island the New York of 1874-98 included a tract of nearly 20 sq m. on the main land previously a part of Westchester co. By the consolidation act of 1898 which went into effect Jan. 1, 1898, the limits of the city were extended so as to include the former city of Brooklyn, a part of Queens co. in Long Island (with Flushing Jamaica Long Island City Newtown and part of Hempstead) Staten Island, and an additional tract of land on the main land besides some small islands. Greater New York as now constituted is officially divided into the boroughs of Manhattan (main New York) Brooklyn Queens Richmond (Staten Island) and the Bronx (the portion on the main land). In its full extent the city covers an area of 320 sq m. in which is included a part of New York Bay and has a length of 15 miles. Pop. in 1900 2,437,302. (The boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx represent what in ordinary parlance is understood by New York city and they alone will be considered in the descriptive portion of this article. The other parts of New York will be found treated on for their respective heads.) The lat. of the city hall is 40° 42' 43" N. its lon. 74° 0' 3" W. and it is about 14 miles E in the Atlantic Ocean 144 miles by the Hudson River and 213 miles by rail NW of Boston and 99 miles NE of Philadelphia. Lat. of Columbia University observatory 40° 45' 23" N. lon. 74° 0' 25" W.

Within the present limits of the city (which includes Blackwell's Ward's and Randall's islands in the East River and Hart's Island, etc. in the Sound) are a number of former villages and hamlets the names of which are still in colloquial use to designate the localities. Indeed the prefixes of some of them are continued as branches of the main post-offices of the city under their former distinctive names. Among these are Harlem, Washington Heights (with Fort Washington) Inwood Mott Haven Fort Morris Morrisania Tremont West Farms Fordham Kings Bridge Spuyten Duyvil Riverdale and Mount St Vincent.

The location of New York is strikingly beautiful. The majestic Hudson (or North) River nearly a mile in width here enters Upper New York Bay a noble land-locked harbor about 40 miles in circumference, which communicates with Lower New York Bay by the Narrows, a channel between Long Island and the hilly and verdant Staten Island, little more than a mile across. Opposite the upper part of the city the Palisades tower like a huge wall from the Hudson shore to a height of 300-400 feet. The northern end of Manhattan Island rises picturesque to a height of about 250 ft. and here are large stretches of land still rural in their aspect. Portions of the Harlem River offer charming bits of scenery. The borough of the Bronx is half city half country. The main portion of New York is laid out with severe rectangular regularity the streets and intersecting broader avenues taking ESE-WNW and NNE-SSW courses. In the southernmost parts (or below Tenth Street) the streets are mostly narrow and often irregular in their lines and intersections. In a part of this section, known as the New York East Side, is concentrated a large portion of the resident foreign population living mainly in densely packed tenement-houses. The chief thoroughfare of New York is Broadway its most important business street and the most imposing commercial avenue of the world. It extends northward from the park called the Battery near the southern end of Manhattan Island, and is built up for a distance of about 7 miles.

Above Tenth Street it changes its direction somewhat, approaching nearer to the Hudson, and thus intersects some of the principal avenues, breaking into the rectangular plan of the city. The northern portion of the city contains several stately avenues and boulevards, and on the west side, extending from Seventy-second Street for a distance of 3 miles is the superb Riverside Drive (or Park) which affords most striking views of the North (or Hudson) River. The drive-way and promenade, which at present terminates in a noble viaduct, are now (1906) being extended northward by the construction of a great causeway. A prominent physiographic feature of this section of Manhattan Island is the abrupt elevation known as Morning side Heights partly occupied by the Morningside Park which rises to about 150 feet above the level of the river. On it are located the new buildings of Columbia University St. Luke's Hospital and the Cathedral of St. John the Divine now (1905) in course of erection. Beyond Morningside Park a rocky ridge extends northward, known as Washington Heights.

The rapid northward development of the city has led to an extensive centering of population beyond the Harlem River and to the location of streets (as in Morrisania West Farms etc.) in direct continuation of and harmony with those of the island. The river is crossed by a number of bridges, of which the famous High Bridge constructed to carry the old Croton Aqueduct (1842), consisting of 14 arches, and measuring 1460 feet in length and the Washington Bridge, a steel structure erected in 1883-88 at a cost of $3,700,000 having two central spans of 610 feet each and measuring 2400 feet in length deserve special mention. The new Croton Aqueduct, which with the old aqueduct supplies the city a water and in itself has a capacity of 300,000,000 gallons daily is carried under the Harlem River at a depth of 300 feet. The completion of the Harlem Ship Canal (189) permits the passage of vessels of 10 feet draught between Long Island Sound and the Hudson River.

Near the head of Upper New York Bay are 3 islands belonging to the United States—Governor's Bedloe's and Ellis Islands. Governor's Island a military station and has various fortifications. Ellis Island is the station where the bulk of the immigrants to the United States are received and examined. The East River islands are occupied by hospitals asylums and correctional institutions belonging to the city. On Blackwell's Island is one of the city penitentiaries. Tunneling Manhattan Island with the city of Brooklyn are two magnificent East River suspension bridges with an elevation at the middle of the main span of 135 feet above high water. The older commonly known as the Brooklyn Bridge was erected between the years 1869 and 1883. Its length including the approaches is 5930 ft. the distance between the main piers 278 ft. high is 1595 ft. The new bow River bridge, commonly called the Williamsburg Bridge which was completed in 1904 greatly surpasses the older bridge in its dimensions having a total length of 7200 ft. Its main span is 1600 ft. and its width is 118 ft. Its piers are made of steel trusses. In addition to carriage- and foot-ways it carries six railway tracks. Between these two structures another suspension bridge is (1906) in course of construction and a fourth one, the longest of all is being built to connect the borough of Queens with Manhattan Island.

The vast commercial and financial interests of New York have their seat in the southern part of the island most of the larger business houses (wholesale and retail) and nearly all of the banking and fiduciary institutions being located between Twenty-fifth Street the distance between which and the extremity of the island is about 3 miles. The main retail section is, however rapidly extending northward into residential quarters giving way to business. Immensely rich the principal seat of the retail trade is the quarter of the city containing the palatial hotels and the theatres. Beyond this follows the modern residential section with its many apartment-houses, its sumptuous private mansions, and its magnificent club houses. A great space in the middle of the island is occupied by Central Park. On both sides of the lower section of the city the river fronts for a distance of about 1/2 mile, present a succession of piers with water deep enough for the largest ocean steamers the greater number of which find their wharves on the North River front. Much of the shipping of New York has its moorings at Brooklyn where there are immense docks, and at Hoboken and Jersey City on the New Jersey side of the Hudson River. An active ferry boat service places Manhattan Island in communication with the boroughs on Long Island with Staten Island (borough of Richmond) and with Jersey City and Hoboken. A double tunnel under the Hudson River to connect Jersey City with New York is nearing completion.

Among the more noteworthy streets of New York are Broadway already referred to. Wall Street the centre of the 'magnates' in finance and transportation—the Lombard Street of the New World. Park Row where are located the publication offices of some of the leading journals of the city. Fifth Avenue, ranking as the foremost street of wealth and fashion in the United States, now converted in part into a business street. Madison Avenue, second only to Fifth Avenue in the elegance of its private residences. West End Avenue, Central Park West, and the Riverside Drive, already mentioned splendid residence streets. Sixth Avenue, a busy thoroughfare of the retail trade. and Third Avenue lined with modest shops, the longest business thoroughfare in the world. Among the streets which were conspicuous features of the New York of the middle of the nineteenth century but which have been thrust into the background or have largely lost their importance, are Pearl Fulton Greenwich, Grand Canal and Hudson streets. East Broadway and the broad avenue called the Bowery. A recreation course, skirting the Harlem River and reserved for fast driving is the 'speedway'. The architecture of the city until recently was marked by no special individuality or particularly attractive features. In the last quarter of a century however an endless variety has been displayed in the construction of edifices of every class and New York outstrip all other cities in the development of the type of construction embodied in the lofty skyscrapers—steel framed buildings carrying 20-30 stories and rising to the extraordinary height of 250-350 feet. The aspect of some of these houses (office-buildings) is such as to give judgement to many hundred lawsuits.

New York's pre-eminence as the metropolis of the country makes it the seat of various national societies and associations for the advancement of religion, morals, knowledge, etc.—such as the American Bible Society the American Tract Society the publication and missionary societies of various religious denominations etc.—but it is also noted for its local motions and associations of similar kinds and for similar purposes. Among the more noteworthy organizations and institutions for the diffusion of science, art and letters, and for the promotion of culture and learning, among the people, are the Metropolitan Museum of Art founded in 1871 and containing famous collections of Phœnician and Egyptian antiquities and one of the most valuable galleries of paintings in the United States. American Museum of Natural History, surpassed by few institutions of its kind in the world. National Academy of Design. American Geographical Society. New York Historical Society. New York Academy of Science. New York Academy of Medicine. Cooper Institute (or Union) established (1837) for the enlightenment of a single citizen. Peter Cooper which provides free instruction in science, the mechanical and decorative arts, literature, etc. and the National Art Club designed to further the arts and crafts. New York is the seat of the National Sculptural Society the Society of American Artists the Tuxedo Club and the New York Philharmonic Society founded in 1842 has played a great role in the musical life of America. Extensive zoological and botanical gardens are located in Bronx Park in the borough of the Bronx.

Among the higher educational institutions of New York the first place is taken by Columbia University which was chartered in 1754 as Kings College, was renamed Columbia College in 1784, and assumed the title of Columbia University in 1896. Since its complete reorganization in 1890 it contains full university facilities, with departments in law, medicine and surgery applied sciences, philosophy pure sciences and political science. It has in association with it Barnard College (for women) and the Teachers College. The medical department is the College of Physicians and Surgeons. The number of students in all departments is about 3000. The New York University formerly the University of the City of New York chartered in 1831 has departments of arts, science law and medicine (University and Bellevue Medical College New York American Veterinary College). The College of the City of New York and the Normal College (for young women) are institutions on a very extensive scale. Of the schools of theology the Union Theological Seminary (Presbyterian) and the Protestant Episcopal General Theological Seminary have a national reputation. New York has numerous public libraries. The Mercantile, Young Men's Christian Association and Mechanics and Tradesmen's are extensive circulating libraries. The New York Public Library constituted in 1895 through the union of the Astor Lenox and Tilden foundations, to which the New York Free Circulating Library was subsequently added, possesses considerably more than 1,600,000 volumes. The library of Columbia University numbers upward of 350,000 volumes. Among the more notable churches are Trinity (Protestant Episcopal) Church, belonging to the wealthiest single church organization in the United States, a stately Gothic building at the junction of Wall Street and Broadway erected in 1839-46 on the site of an older edifice. St. Paul's, the oldest church building of the city (1754). Grace Church (Protestant Episcopal) 1843-46 and St. Patrick's Cathedral, built of white marble the most imposing ecclesiastical edifice in the United States completed in 1879. Two of the Jewish synagogues the Temple Emanuel and the Temple Beth-el are notable specimens of Moorish architecture. New York contains many large and influential club organizations of a political social and literary character some of them possessing palatial club-houses. Among the many notable buildings of New York are the post-office, a large Renaissance edifice (1876) costing nearly $7,000,000. city hall, a portion of which dates from 1805. court-house, United States sub-treasury United States custom house, stock exchange, produce exchange clearing house chamber of commerce (belonging to the oldest commercial corporation of the United States dating from 1770) building on the appellate court, library of Columbia University (one of the finest architectural monuments of New York) Astor and Lenox libraries, the splendid edifice of the Metropolitan Museum (situated in Central Park) (the vast central station of the steam railroads entering the city the palace of the great insect are common armories hospitals (of which the new Mount Sinai Hospital is the largest) and numerous large hotels and elegant apartment-houses unequalled for their elegance. Among the edifices in course of erection (1905) the splendid New York Public Library occupying the site of the old Croton Reservoir on Fifth Avenue and the new buildings of the College of the City of New York magnificently located near the northern end of Washington Heights, deserve special mention. The theatres of New York cannot lay claim to external or architectural attractions. The principal buildings devoted to music are the Metropolitan Opera House and Carnegie Hall. The leading places of amusement outside of the theatres are the Madison Square Garden and the so-called Hippodrome opened in 1902. The reservoir pier projecting into the Hudson and East rivers, where open air concerts are provided by the city in summer are an interesting feature of New York. The city maintains a fine aquarium in the Battery Park occupying the building formerly known as Castle Garden through which for many years the bulk of the immigrants to the United States passed on their arrival. A comparatively new departure in house life in New York is found in the apartment houses which now predominate in large sections. But very few dwelling houses for single families have been erected on Manhattan Island in recent years.

The public parks of New York as a whole are much praised for their extent and attractiveness. Central Park is one of the finest pleasure-grounds in the world without any natural advantages, by the liberal and judicious expenditure of money one of the most delightful spots conceivable has been created out of a barren wilderness. Its area is 340 acres, about one-fifth of which is water and it has many miles of carriage-drives and bridle-paths and 30 miles of foot-walks. A noteworthy object in Central Park is the Egyptian obelisk known as Cleopatra's Needle, which was brought to New York in 1881. In the northern and newer section of the city a number of large parks (Bronx Van Cortlandt Crotona Pelham Bay) have been laid out. Among the better known of the city squares are Washington Union Madison and Tompkins squares. The most striking piece of monumental work belonging to the city is Grant's Tomb a huge Doric mausoleum of white granite erected on Riverside Drive in 1891-97. The Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument, also on Riverside Drive, is a beautiful structure. At the S end of Fifth Avenue is the Washington Arch. The equestrian statue of General Sherman on the place at the SE corner of Central Park is a notable work by Saint-Gaudens. At the SW corner of Central Park is the Columbus Monument. Prominent in New York harbor on Bedloe's Island is Bartholdi's colossal statue Liberty Enlightening the World standing on a granite pedestal of 155 feet and reaching to a total height of 306 feet.

Communication throughout the city is afforded by an extensive system of surface (electric) tramways by electric elevated roads, and by the great subway road which has recently been opened,—the last named being one of the most extensive pieces of municipal engineering work undertaken in the United States. It traverses the whole of Manhattan Island and is to connect with Brooklyn by tunnel beneath the East River.

As a business centre New York has long been not only the first city on this continent, but the second city of the world. London, the metropolis of the British realm, being its only superior in the variety, extent, and importance of its commerce, monetary transactions, and general business interests and enterprises. The United States has here its chief sub-treasury, and by far the larger part of all the financial transactions of the general government are effected through the banks and bankers of New York. The port of New York, which includes Brooklyn, Jersey City, Hoboken, etc. receives about two-thirds of the imports into the United States and about one-third of the exports from the United States pass through it. The total value of foreign imports and exports for the year 1901 was $1,667,000,000. About 16 ocean steamers bound for foreign countries clear the port on an average every day. The domestic trade of New York is immense, largely exceeding the foreign. Among the great railway lines that start from New York are the New York Central and Hudson River, the New York, New Haven and Hartford, the Pennsylvania, the Baltimore and Ohio, the Central R. of New Jersey, the Lackawanna, the West Shore, the Erie, the Lehigh Valley, the New York Ontario and Western, and the Long Island. Most of these have their termini at Jersey City or Hoboken. A gigantic railway enterprise is the construction of a tunnel under the Hudson River which with a subway will give access to the heart of New York city. A continuation of the work will be a tunnel under the East River to Long Island City, and it is proposed to build a bridge across the East River near its NE. extremity (between Long Island and the Bronx) so that direct railway communication will be established between New England and the Atlantic seaboard to the S. of New York. The passenger station now being built in New York in connection with this undertaking will be on an enormous scale.

The manufactures of New York are only less important than its commerce. The census of 1906 reported 36,777 establishments, employing 462,799 hands and yielding a product valued at $1,771,000,000. The leading industries comprise the manufacture of clothing and trimmings, cigars, malted liquors, machinery, foundry products, jewelry, musical instruments, leather goods, electrical apparatus, etc. printing and publishing, sugar-refining (carried on on a vast scale in Brooklyn), the roasting and grinding of coffee and spices, etc.

The government of the municipality of New York (i.e. New York proper and the boroughs that have been incorporated with it) is vested in a mayor and a board of aldermen. At the head of each borough is a president elected by the citizens. The mayor's term of office, beginning with the year 1906 is four years. He has the right of vetoing enactments of the board of aldermen although except in matters of franchise, his veto may be overridden. He has the power of appointing the heads of the various departments, with the exception of the comptroller who is elected by the people.

The approaches to the harbor of New York are defended by strong fortifications at Sandy Hook, the Narrows, and at the head of Long Island Sound. New York has on the whole a healthful climate. The summer heat, however, is often well-nigh intolerable, especially when the atmosphere is saturated with moisture, and the proximity to the sea while it moderates the intensity of the winter cold renders it also less endurable. Of the various bays by recreation resorts the most popular is Coney Island on the Long Island shore, now included in the borough of Brooklyn.

Verrazano, an Italian navigator in 1494, was probably the first European to enter New York Bay. In 1609 Henry Hudson, an English navigator in the employ of the Dutch East India Company, sailed up New York Bay and the Hudson River. About four years later the Dutch began the establishment of trading-posts on Manhattan Island where a place soon arose which received the name of New Amsterdam. Among the early settlers were many Flemings and Walloons. In 1664 the town was surrendered to the British, taking the name of New York retained by the Dutch nine years afterwards, it was held by them but a single year. In 1677 there were 394 houses. In 1790 the population was 8,000. The New York Gazette a weekly paper appeared in 1726. From 1776-83 the city was in the hands of the British. New York was the meeting place of Congress from 1785-90 and here Washington was inaugurated president in 1789. In 1807 the first steamer was built at this port to navigate the Hudson. The opening of the Erie Canal in 1825 gave a great impetus to the growth of New York. In 1835 a conflagration destroyed a large part of the principal business section of the city. Steam communication with the Old World was inaugurated in 1838. In 1842 the first Croton Aqueduct was completed. In 1852 the bloody anti-conscription riots took place in New York. In 1875 the limits of the city were extended beyond Manhattan Island the northern portion of Westchester co. being annexed to it. In 1878 a grand system of overhead transportation was inaugurated. In 1883 the Brooklyn Bridge was opened to traffic and in 1890 the new Croton Aqueduct was completed. In 1897-98 New York, Brooklyn (with its surroundings), Long Island City, Staten Island, etc. were united into one municipality. The second great bridge across the East River was opened to the public in 1904 and in the following year the great subway railroad was put into operation.

The population of New York for the decennial periods since the first national census is as follows: on 1790, 33,131, in 1800 60,499, in 1810 95,373, in 1820 123,766, in 1830 241,112, in 1840, 313,716, in 1850, 515,547, in 1860 813,640, in 1870, 942,292, in 1880 1,305,390, in 1890, 1,515,301, and in 1900, after the formation of Greater New York, 3,427,202, of whom 1,860,003 belonged to the borough of Manhattan and 200,507 to the borough of the Bronx. The population of the remaining boroughs was Brooklyn, 1,166,582, Richmond 67,021, and Queens 152,999. The population now (1906) is in the neighborhood of 4,000,000. The towns and cities in the outskirts of New York within a radius of 12 miles from the city hall, had a population in 1900 of more than 750,000. They include Jersey City, Hoboken, West Hoboken, Union, Bayonne, Newark, the Oranges, Elizabeth, Hackensack, etc., all in New Jersey. A zone beyond this 12 miles wide, had a population of between 500,000 and 400,000. In this zone are Paterson, Passaic, Plainfield, Montclair, Perth Amboy, and other cities in New Jersey and Yonkers, Mount Vernon, New Rochelle, and other places in New York. Beyond this is still a great ring full of towns and villages which are residential suburbs of New York. The total population of New York and its surroundings within a radius of 30 miles from the city hall is now about 3,250,000. The bulk of the inhabitants of New York are foreign born or of foreign parentage. The foreign born alone constitute about one-third of the population. Of these the most numerous are the Jews (mainly from Russia, Russian Poland, and Austria-Hungary), Irish Germans, and Italians. There are large numbers of French, English, Scotch, Hungarians, Swedes, and other Europeans. There are Chinese and Syrian quarters in the lower part of the city. The number of negroes in 1900 was 80,665. The rate of mortality in New York considering the unsanitary conditions under which a large part of the inhabitants dwell is an account of over-crowding, is surprisingly low.

New York, a post-village of Wayne co. Iowa, about 13 miles E. of Clarion. Pop. 100.

New York, a post-village of Henderson co. Tex. Pop. 80.

New York Bay, an inlet of the Atlantic Ocean at the mouth of the Hudson River, on which the city of New York is situated. It consists of Upper New York Bay (or New York Bay proper) and Lower New York Bay. The former is an almost land-locked harbor roughly circular in shape, with a greatest length of about 5 miles enclosed by New Jersey (Jersey City and Bayonne), Manhattan Island, the borough of Brooklyn (included in New York city) and Staten Island (borough of Richmond in New York city). It communicates by the strait called the Narrows a little more than a mile in width with the Lower Bay, and by the East River with Long Island Sound. The Kill van Kull and Staten Island Sound connect it by a narrow and circuitous channel with Raritan Bay. This harbor is one of the finest bays in the New World. In its northern part are Governor's Island, and Ellis Island, all belonging to the United States government. Governor's Island is a military station with fortifications. On Bedloe's Island is the colossal statue of Liberty Enlightening the World, designed by Bartholdi. The Lower Bay is between Staten Island, Long Island and New Jersey. Its entrance, between Sandy Hook on the S. and Coney Island (a projection of Long Island) on the N. is about 6 miles across. Its western prolongation is Raritan Bay. Vessels of the greatest draught can pass the bar at Sandy Hook at high water and sail up to the piers of New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City or Hoboken. There are strong fortifications on Sandy Hook and the Narrows are defended by forts Hamilton, Lafayette, Tompkins, and Wadsworth.

New York Mills, a banking post-village of Ottertail co., Minn., on the Northern Pacific R. 78 miles E. of Mound. Pop. in 1900, 353.

New York Mills, a post-village of Oneida co., N. Y. on Sadegs Creek and near the Erie Canal about 96 miles WNW of Albany. It has manufactures of yarns and cottons. Pop. about 1500.

New Zealand, a British colony in the South Pacific Ocean consisting of a chain of islands, embracing two large ones (North and South Islands) and one small one (Stewart Island formerly known as South Island), besides others of less note. By a decree of June, 1841 the boundary of the colony was extended so as to include Cook Island and some other islets of the Pacific. The Auckland, Chatham, and Kermadec islands, lying from 300 to 600 miles distant, had previously been attached. The main chain extends from Cape North in lat. $34^{\circ} 22' S$ to Cape South in lat. $47^{\circ} 29' S$ and from Cape West, in lon. $166^{\circ} 40' E$, to Cape Waiapu, in lon. $178^{\circ} 38' E$. The areas of the three islands are estimated as follows: North Island, 44,468 sq. m. South (formerly known as Middle) Island, 58,525 sq. m. Stewart (South) Island, 660 sq. m. giving for the three 103,653 sq. m. Pop. in 1901 815,863, including 43,143 Maori; and 2367 Chinese. Cook Strait separates North Island from South Island and the latter is separated from Stewart Island by Foveaux Strait. When established as a colony in 1840 North, Middle, and South Islands were re-named—New Ulster, New Munster and New Leinster; but these titles are out of use since the provincial divisions with their local governments have been instituted. The provincial divisions are now known as Auckland, Taranaki, Wellington and Hawke Bay, on North Island and Marlborough, Nelson, Westland, Canterbury, and Otago on South Island.

The New Zealand coast measures upward of 4300 miles in length and is deeply indented by mountain-rimmed fjords, the scenery of which frequently recalls that of Norway. There are a number of good harbors, some of which are almost unsurpassed in the southern hemisphere. Parallel mountain ridges, trending in a general way from the SW to the NE, form the backbone of the region and extend in tectonic continuation from the extreme NW to the premonitory which in North Island bounds the Bay of Plenty on the SE. These mountains in the South Island are of an Alpine character and present all the distinctive features of the true European Alps. They culminate in about lat. $43^{\circ} 15' S$ in Mount Cook, 12,560 feet in elevation. Other lofty summits of the New Zealand Alps are Hector Tindall, and Petermann. This region is one of extensive glaciation (Godley, Tasman, Mueller glaciers) the glacial tongues in some instances descending to within 1000 feet or less of sea-level.

A number of volcanic peaks appear prominently in North Island extending in a volcanic line from Mount Egmont (8270 feet), Rapaheke (8008 feet) and Tongariro (the last two active) in the NW to White Island in the Bay of Plenty in the NE. Associated with or on either side of this line is a vast region of hot springs, lakes, geysers, and water deposits one of the most remarkable in the world. Southward of the Bay of Plenty, in Auckland is the famous region of Rotomahana and Hekara, which was visited by an catastrophic eruption of Tarawera in June, 1886, and where were located the famous pink and white terraces (since) destroyed at that time. See these titles.

New Zealand has considerable areas of flat land, some of which is immediately adapted to cultivation. The Canterbury Plains in South Island, measuring about 160 miles in length and 30 miles in greatest width are almost a dead level. The running waters of New Zealand are very numerous, but they are mostly torrential in character and ill adapted to navigation. The largest river of the colony is the Waikato, in North Island, which flows from Lake Taupo and is traversed by river-steamboats for much of its course. Of the total area of the land nearly one-third is still under forest, the Kauri pine and other conifers yielding fine timber. The open lands are largely overgrown with grasses and the abundant New Zealand flax (Phormium tenax). A glory of the forest lands is constituted by the giant tree-ferns, which frequently attain 50-60 feet in height. Nearly all the commoner fruits of temperate Europe may be grown and in some places the lemon and orange fruit abundantly. The chief agricultural crops are wheat, oats, barley and hay. The live-stock of the colony is very numerous; the number of sheep in 1902 was upward of 20,000,000. Owing to its isolated and oceanic character the indigenous fauna is an impoverished and clearly defined one, its quality being negative rather than positive. Its most interesting features are to-day, perhaps best seen among birds in the wingless apteryx (or kiwi) and the kakapo (or ground-parrot). The extinct fauna comprises the recently exterminated giant wingless (struthious) birds known as the moa. All the forms of domestic animals have been introduced and some of these, such as the hog and rabbit, have run wild. A number of the useful metals and minerals have a fairly wide distribution and are being mined in quantity. The gold output of the year 1901 was 455,561 ounces, valued at £1,703,783. Silver 571,134 ounces, coal 1,237,638 tons, valued at £619,919. Some ore of antimony and manganese has also been obtained. The value of the colonial produce exported in 1901 was £12,660,000 of which the wool exports amounted to £3,090,103. The frozen meat, to £2,253,262. Hides, skins and leather to £477,460, and kauri gum to £440,114. The climate is equable, pleasant, and salubrious, the mean annual temperature being: for Auckland, in lat. $36^{\circ} 34' S$, 50° , for New Plymouth, in $36^{\circ} 31' S$, 50° ; for Wellington, in $41^{\circ} 16' S$, 55° ; for Nelson, in $41^{\circ} 12' S$, 55° ; for Christchurch in $43^{\circ} 35' S$, 53° and for Dunedin, in $45^{\circ} 46' S$, 50° . Mean of the coldest month at Otago, 40° and of the warmest at Auckland 68° . High winds prevail. The average rainfall in North Island varies in the respective provinces from 45½ inches to 59 inches annually while in South Island it is from 30 to 54½ inches. In parts of the western mountain tracts the precipitation may be as much as 120 or even 140 inches. Snow seldom falls, excepting in the southern parts of South Island.

The first railroad in New Zealand, between Christchurch and Lyttelton, was opened Dec. 1, 1863. In 1873 a comprehensive railway system was commenced by the government and in 1893 the total length of lines which had been constructed was 1588 miles and in 1902, 2323 miles. The Maori, or primitive inhabitants of New Zealand, represent the most promising type of the Polynesian race. They are well formed physically, robust and vigorous, exhibit great mental capacity, are gifted with poetic instincts, and secure an appreciation of the benefits of European civilization. In the fierce wars which they waged with the whites and which ended in their subjugation 40 years ago they displayed great military skills as well as prowess. They profess Christianity and are admitted to a share in the government. The Maori is not dying out under the new conditions of existence imposed upon them by European civilization. New Zealand was discovered in 1642 by James Cook explored the islands between 1769 and 1777. Missionary labors were prosecuted with success in the early part of the nineteenth century. British colonization was begun in 1840 under the auspices of the New Zealand Company and in the same year England proclaimed her dominion over the islands. The Maori was subdued only after protracted bloodshed. In 1852 a constitutional form of government was established. The legislative power is vested in a governor (who is assisted by a ministry of 8 members) and a general assembly consisting of 2 chambers. The capital is Wellington. Other important towns are Auckland, Christchurch and Dunedin. The leading educational institutions are Otago University, at Dunedin, Canterbury College, at Christchurch, Auckland University College and Victoria College, at Wellington. The University of New Zealand is solely an examining body standing in affiliation with the above colleges. In no other country of the world has state socialism and the participation of government in matters affecting labor and capital advanced with such strides as in New Zealand.

New Zion, a post-township of Clermont co. SO 20 miles NE of Manning. Pop. in 1900 1995.

Nexo, a town of Denmark on the coast of the island of Bornholm. Pop. about 2000.

Nexon, a town of France, in Haute-Vienne 10 miles S of Limoges. Pop. 1006 (communes, 5000).

Ney, a post-village of Delaware co. Ohio on the Cincinnati Northern R. 6½ miles E of Bryan. Pop. in 1900 280.

Neyland, a town of Wales in Pembrokeshire, on Milford Haven. Pop. in 1901 2837.

Neyland, a post-village of Hunt co. Tex. on the St. Louis Southwestern and the Texas Midland R. The banking point is Greenville. Pop. 100.

Neyva, Neyva, or Neiba, a town of Santa Domingo 70 miles E of Port-au-Prince, on the river Neyva, which enters Neyva Bay on the S coast, after a course of 15 miles.

Neyva, a town of Colombia. See Neiva.

Nezhin, or Niozhin, a town of Russia, government and 30 miles SSE of Tchernizov on the Oster. It is the seat of a historical-philological institute of high rank with a library of 60,000 volumes. Tobacco is an important crop of the district. Pop. in 1897, 32,100.

Nexperce, a banking post-village of Nez Perce co. Idaho, 45 miles SE of Kendrick. Pop. about 500.

Nex Perce, a county in the NW part of Idaho borders on Washington Area, 1421 sq. m. It is bounded on the S by the Salmon River and intersected by the Clearwater. The Snake (or Lewis) River forms part of its W boundary. Capital, Lewiston. Pop. in 1890 2347. In 1900 13,743.

Nexplique Bayou, a peak of La. rises in St. Landry parish runs eastward and unites with the Plaquemine Bayou on the E. border of Calcasieu parish to form the Mermentau River.

Ngami, a lake, a former lake of southern Africa, in the Bechuanaland Protectorate, between lat. 26° and $21^{\circ} S$. Elevation about 3300 feet. The Tloko River was its chief tributary and the discharge was effected by the Zuga. The lake has practically disappeared and its place is now occupied by a reed grown muck. The lake was discovered by Livingstone in 1849.

Nga-hwei, n'ga hwi' an inland province of China, between lat. 39° and 34° N enclosed by Kiang-su, Che-kiang, Kiang-si, Hu peh, and Ho-nan. Area, about 55,000 sq m. It is watered by the rivers Yang-tse-kiang and Hwai-hu and their affluents. Population estimated at about 20,000,000. Capital, Nga-king.

Nga-king, n'ga king, or Nga-king-fa, the capital of the province of Nga-hwei, China, 160 miles SW of Nanking on the Yang-tse-kiang. It is one of the interior ports opened to foreign commerce. Pop. estimated at 40,000.

Ngaandere, ngi-on-dá ri, the chief market of Adama, Africa, about 150 miles (direct) SSE of Yola. Lat. 7° 26' N. Lon. 13° 40' E. Pop. estimated at 30,000.

Ngouen, or Ngoua, n'go a, a walled town of the Algerian Sahara, oasis and 19 miles NE of Wargla.

Ngoué, a river of French Congo joins the Ogoué, on the S in about lon. 10° 21' E.

Nhill, a post-town of Victoria, Australia, 243 miles by rail NW of Melbourne. Pop. about 1300.

Niagara, ni-eg-ga (originally ni-ga-ga or rather ne-ga-ga) a river which forms part of the boundary between New York and Ontario issues from the eastern end of Lake Erie at Buffalo runs nearly northward and after a course of about 35 miles enters Lake Ontario, having in this distance an aggregate fall of about 330 feet. It encloses several islands, the largest of which called Goat Island is nearly 10 miles long and 8 miles wide. About 4 miles below this island is the most celebrated cataract in the world. The river is divided by Goat Island half a mile long, into two separate falls, the one on the Canadian side, which carries more than three-fourths of all the water forming the Horseshoe Fall with a perpendicular descent of 153 ft. and with a contour of 3010 ft. The height of the American Fall is 167 ft and the width 1060 ft. The entire width of the river at Goat Island is 4710 ft. the discharge over the falls is estimated to be 15,000,000 cubic feet per minute. The rock which crops out at the top of the cataract and forms the bed of the river is Niagara Limestone (Upper Silurian). Below the cataract the river flows in a gorge or chasm between perpendicular walls of rock which are nearly 250 ft. high the width of the channel varying from 400 to 1200 ft. At the Whirlpool Rapids the stream is constricted to a width of 250-300 ft. and the convex water is 20 ft. higher in the center than on the edges. The river descends 104 ft. between the Falls and Lewiston a distance of 6-7 miles. Several noble bridges cross the river below the cataract and connect the railways which converge at the towns on the opposite banks of the river. Geologists concur in the opinion that the cataract was once 6 miles nearer to Lake Ontario than it is now the view being held that before the existence of any cataract the waters of the upper great lakes were discharged through the Mississippi valley. The outcrop of the Niagara gorge is assumed to have taken place since the Glacial Epoch and its age is variously estimated at from 10,000 to 40,000-50,000 years. The average annual recession of the falls is about 1 1/2 ft. The energy of Niagara Falls is utilized for the production of electricity on an enormous scale. The land on both sides of the falls constitutes the New York State Reservation and the Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Park. The falls were discovered by Hennepin in 1678 but they appear in Senon's Map of Canada bearing date of 1657 under the name of Ongara.

Niagara, a western county of New York bordering on Canada, has an area of about 523 sq m. It is bounded on the N by Lake Ontario, on the E by Tonawanda Creek and on the W by the Niagara River. It is traversed by the Erie Canal. The cataract of Niagara is on the W border. Capital, Lockport. Pop. in 1890 62,491 in 1900 74,561.

Niagara, a post-village of Henderson co. Ky. Pop. 60.

Niagara, a township (town) of Niagara co. N. Y. Pop. in 1900 1066.

Niagara, a post-village of Grand Forks co. N. Dak., on the Great Northern R. Pop. 159.

Niagara, a post-village of Marinette co. Wis. The banking point is Iron Mountain Mich. Pop. 150.

Niagara (formerly Newark) or Niagara-on-the-Lake, a town and outpost of Lincoln co. Ontario, on Lake Ontario at the mouth of the Niagara River and on the Michigan Central R. 36 miles S. of Toronto. This is one of the oldest towns in the province and is a favorite resort during the summer months for pleasure and health seekers. In 1813 it was burned down by the American General McClure in his retreat from the north. Pop. in 1901 1258.

Niagara Falls, a city of Niagara co. N. Y., is situated on the Niagara River at the falls from which it takes its name, 23 miles N. W. of Buffalo and 13 miles E. of Lake Ontario, on the Erie, the New York Central and Hudson River and other railroads. It is the seat of Niagara University (Roman Catholic) and De Vaux College, and has paper and other mills, reduction-works, manufactures of graphite, aluminum, carbonadium, plated-ware, enamel wheels, hair-cloth, gas-machines, etc. and extensive electrolytic-works which develop enormous horse-power from the cataract waters. Several bridges (suspension cantilever steel-arch) cross the river at this point. A New York State Reservation, including Prospect Park was established here in 1885. Pop. in 1900 19,457.

Niagara Falls, a banking town and port of entry of Welland co. Ontario, on the Niagara River 3 miles below the falls on the Michigan Central and other railroads. It has manufactures of carbonadium, machine-shops, and wheels. The river is here crossed by two bridges. Pop. in 1901 4244.

Niagara Falls Center, a post-village of Welland co. Ontario. The banking point is Niagara Falls, 1 mile distant. Pop. about 1000.

Niagara Falls South, a banking post-village of Welland co. Ontario, on the Michigan Central R. 24 miles from the town of Niagara Falls. Pop. in 1901 1458.

Niam-Niam, a powerful tribe of Africa, recovered from the trans-Negro inhabiting the region N. of the Ubangi River and of the water parting between the upper Nile and the Shari.

Niangua, a post-village of Webster co. Mo. on the St. Louis and San Francisco R. 31 miles NE of Springfield. Pop. 100.

Niangua (or Big Niangua) River, Mo. rises in Webster co. and enters the Osage River about 2 miles above the village of Linn Creek.

Niantic, a post-village of New London co. Conn. on an inlet of the sea, called Niantic Bay and on the New York New Haven and Hartford R. 5 miles SW of New London its banking point. It has manufactures of cotton machinery, fish-oil etc. and granite-works. Pop. about 1100.

Niantic, a banking post town of Mason co. Ill. on the Wabash R. 12 miles W. of Decatur. Pop. in 1900 634.

Niantic, a post-village of Montgomery co. Pa. The banking point is Buylertown. Pop. about 300.

Niantic, a post-village of Washington co. R. I. on the Charles River and in the New York New Haven and Hartford R. 10 miles NE of Stonington Conn. It has granite-quarries, etc. Pop. about 400.

Nias, or Falso-Nias, pulau nias is an island of the Malay Archipelago on the W. coast of Sumatra. Lat. 1° 30' N. It produces rice. On its E. coast is a village or town of the same name.

Nibbiano, nib-be-à no a village and commune of Italy 8 miles S. of Piacenza.

Nibe, nio-bà a town of Denmark in Jotland 12 miles WSW of Aalborg on the Lim Fjord. Pop. about 1500.

Nicoma, the ancient name of Nice, France.

Nicom, a city of Asia Minor. See Iznik.

Nicaragua, ni-ka-ri-ga a republic of Central America having W. the Pacific Ocean S. the Caribbean Sea N. the republic of Honduras (from which it is partly separated by the Segovia or Wanks R. ar) and S. Costa Rica. Area 49,200 sq m. The Gulf of Fonseca on the Pacific coast separates it from Salvador. The Atlantic slope is largely a depressed alluvial plain. The surface rises in the interior to the heights of Segovia, Matagalpa and Chontales with elevations of 5000-6000 feet. Beyond these heights is a depression occupied by Lake Nicaragua (surface about 104 ft. above the sea) and a Volcans and further northward by the Gulf of Fonseca. Between the lakes and the Pacific is a range of low sierritas, which is the present water parting (reduced to 163 feet a short distance S. of the town of Rivas) if the republic. On the Pacific side, closely associated with the depression occupied by the lakes, are a number of active and seminaive volcanoes the most noted of which are Cosagua, in the NW which had a paroxysmal eruption in 1835 (elevation 3830 ft.) Telica, Vieja (3830 ft.) Las Platas, Momotombo (in eruption in 1902 and 1905) Masaya, Omasapa, Zapatera, and Madera, the last three within the basin of Lake Nicaragua itself. There are numerous rivers but none, except the San Juan are of much importance for navigation. Lakes Nicaragua and Managua (or Lago) the latter discharging into the former through the Tiptapa are respectively 60 and 40 miles long.

The climate is, on the whole, healthy though it varies in different sections. In the interior and mountainous parts the atmosphere is more dry and cool than on the coasts, where it is hot and more or less humid. The rainfall is in some parts excessive, being upward of 200 inches in an average year at Greytown and at other points of the Atlas.

the coast. Towards the Pacific it is reduced to 50 inches and less. The products are indigo, sugar, tobacco, coffee, cacao, bananas, and rubber and corn, rice, and beans, part of the staple food of the people are largely grown. The coffee crop (the principal crop) in 1902 was estimated at 30,000,000 pounds, the sugar export reached in 1901 4,000,000 pounds, while the banana export from the Bluefields region alone amounted to 1,303,845 bunches. The oranges and lemons are of fine quality. The minerals are chiefly gold, silver and copper. The shipments of gold (in bar and dust) amounted in 1900 to 18,500 ounces.

There are few good roads in the interior and there are only about 175 miles of railroad in operation. Transit across the country from the Atlantic (Greytown) to the Pacific side is effected by the steamers on the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua and the continuing line of railroad on the west. The chief towns of Nicaragua are Managua (the present capital) León (the largest city with about 45,000 inhabitants) Granada, Masaya, Chinandega, and Matagalpa. The chief ports or harbors are Greytown (San Juan del Norte) Bluefields, and Crucero-6-Diez on the Atlantic side and Corinto and San Juan del Sur on the Pacific. The republic is administered by a president, elected for a term of 4 years, who is assisted by a council of ministers. The legislative power is vested in a Congress of a single house elected by universal suffrage for a term of 2 years. Pop. in 1900 estimated at 500,000, mainly composed of Indians, mulattoes, and negroes. Only a small percentage are pure whites. The Europeans probably do not exceed 1200. After belonging to Spain for 3 centuries Nicaragua formed part of the Confederation of Central America from 1823 till its dissolution in 1839, since which time it has been an independent republic. For the projected Nicaragua Canal see NICARAGUA LAKE.

Nicaragua, a town of the republic of Nicaragua. See Rivas.

Nicaragua, Lake (Sp. Lago de Nicaragua; in Gu. la ga dh ne-ká-rá gwá), an extensive sb. of water in the republic of Nicaragua, Central America, 100 miles long from NW to SE, greatest breadth 40 miles. It lies about 100 feet above sea-level and is separated from the Pacific Ocean by a strip of land only 13 miles wide. The river San Juan flows from its SE extremity into the Caribbean Sea, and at its NW extremity it is connected with the smaller lake of Managua, or León (lying 30 ft. higher) by the river Tipitapa. The greatest depth is about 200 ft. Waterfowl and excellent fish are abundant; alligators are numerous. It contains some islands and several groups of islets, mostly of volcanic origin. Of the former Zapatera, Ometepe, and Maderas are the largest. Zapatera is now a mountain rising to a height of nearly 2000 ft. Ometepe is occupied by an industrial race of Indians who raise maize, etc. and possess some cattle. Maderas is joined to Ometepe by a low neck of land which is frequently overflowed. On these islands are the twin volcanoes of Altillo (maize and Maderas both of them about 5000 ft. in height. The islets are generally conical in shape and seldom exceed 3 or 4 acres in area. They are covered with verdure and on many of them are outcroppings of ground. Numerous relics of antiquity have been found about the lake consisting of huge, elaborately sculptured stones, massive idols, and figures of monstrous animals. The material is commonly black basalt and the cutting exhibits great freedom and skill. Lake Nicaragua has long been thought of in connection with the construction of an interoceanic canal and numerous surveys looking to the execution of this project have been made at different times. The most recent surveys established a line (now superseded by the Panama route) having a total length of 185 miles with the partial use and canalization of the San Juan River and a cut extending from the SW coast to Brito on the Pacific. The chief town on the banks of the lake is Granada.

Nicarua, or Nikarua, ne-ká-ren-á (anc. len-á), an island of the Grecian Archipelago belonging to Turkey, 12 miles W of Samos. Area, 50 sq m. Nice, nees (It. Nizza, but ah and Nizza), an episcopal city and seaport of France capital of the department of Alpes-Maritimes, previous to 1850 part of the kingdom of Sardina, situated on the Mediterranean at the mouth of the Paillon, 84 miles NE. of Toulon. Lat. of observatory 43° 42' 16" N. lon. 7° 18' 4" E. It is beautifully situated in a small plain, which it almost covers, at the foot of the Maritime Alps, and its site is well guarded by a line of fortifications. On the N. and the E. the mountain ranges enclose it in the form of an amphitheatre. The city is divided into the old and the new town, the latter to the W. of the Paillon, being generally designated the Strangers' Quarter. The streets of the former are in the main crooked and narrow although replaced near the shore by better ones. In the new city there are many attractive squares and boulevards flanked by handsome private and public edifices. The Place Masséna and Place du Casino (on which is the stately Casino Municipal) are the focal points of the city's social life, which displays itself along the Jardin Public, the superb Promenade des Anglais (constructed by the English in 1822-24) the Jetée-Promenade, and the Boulevard du Midi. Nice has a cathedral, several theatres, hospitals, a public library, municipal museum, observatory, etc. It has some silk-cotton- and paper industries, many oil-mills and manufactures of tobacco, leather, soap, wine, asbestos, inland work, straw hats, etc. Floriculture is largely carried on and there is an extensive trade in southern fruits. The harbor or port (of Lympeus) lies three-fourths of a mile E. of the Paillon; it is small and open to the SE. Nice is noted for its mild equable, and salubrious climate (average winter temperature 48°) and is a favorite winter resort of foreigners, whose numbers are estimated at from 10,000 to 15,000 annually. It was ceded with some adjacent territory by Victor Emmanuel to France in 1860. Pop. in 1901, 38,480 (commune 100,100).

Niger, nee'-jer or Quorra, written also Kwara and Kowara, called Joliba (jo'-ba) in the upper part of its course, a great river of western Africa, and after the Nile and the Congo the largest river of the African continent, rises in the country of the Mandingoes in about lat. 8° 40' N. lon 10° 30' W. and flowing N and NE towards the Sahara, afterwards turns SE and S. and enters the sea through many mouths in the Gulf of Benue. Towards its source it is called the Tombi—that is, water in the Khasa language—but lower down in Bambara, it is the Bahaba, Great River or Joliba—that is the river of the Joli or Red Men who are the inhabitants of Joliba-kodu or Jallon-kandu (Red Men's Land). It becomes navigable for steamers at Bamako 150 miles above Baga, in Bambara. Lower down after passing Bessandiga it enters a level country and divides into several arms encircling extensive islands, opposite one of which is Jenno (or properly Umwa) a great emporium of Negroland, from which is derived the name Gambia. The river then enters a territory in which the Fula (or Felleh) are the rulers, within whose domain it is called Ima. In its course down to Jenno the Joliba receives several accessions from the S. Farther on it turns northward crossing Dabo (or Blackwater) Lake, where it receives the Bakhoi on the right. At Kabra (or Kabara) the port of Timbuktu, it touches nearly its highest latitude (about 17° 30' N.) it (now known as Mayo Biallo) then runs E. along the desert towards the frontiers of Houssa (Hausa).

In the Houssa country the great river is known as the Gulin-kowara—that is the River Kwara (or Kowara)—and farther S. in Nupé (or Nyffé) where it is often a league wide or more, it is entitled the sea (or lake) of Nupé (or Ewara). A very active commerce here animates the broad waters of the Quorra. Through Houssa and Nupé flow several streams from the heights which divide these countries from Bornu. Opposite Lokjo, in about lat. 7° 45' N., the Niger unites with its chief (left) tributary the Benue (or Chadde) a navigable stream from Adamawa. The united stream then flows S by W, forming the eastern boundary of Yoruba. In part of this course it is called Ujimini Fafa (or White Water) the Benue being styled Ujimini Dado (or Black Water). The delta of the Niger commences near Aba about 80 miles from the sea. It has numerous mouths the chief of which are the Nun (the navigable mouth) the Forado, and the Bonny. The whole course of the great river from its source to the mouth of the Nun is about 2500 miles. It is regularly traversed for many miles by British steamers. From about lat. 11° 30' N. and lon 4° E. the course of the stream is almost wholly in Nigeria. The scenery near the delta is of the wildest forest character and largely of mangrove swamp. The course of the Niger was a riddle to geographers until it was revealed by the explorations of Mungo Park (Clapperton) and Denham and Lander between 1795 and 1830.

Nigeria, a vast region of west-central Africa, within the British sphere of influence, comprising since 1900 the entire territory that was formerly administered by the Royal Niger Company (which constituted about four fifths of the area of the present region), the region of the Niger Coast Protectorate and the Lagos Protectorate. Most of it lies be-back again to the Nile. In lat. $29^{\circ} 15' N$ the Nile divides into two branches, leading respectively to Rosetta (Rashid), in the W and Damietta (Damut), in the E, entering the sea after traversing the whole of Egypt, in about lat $31^{\circ} 26' N$. From the influx of the Bahr-el Awek to its delta the basin of the Nile varying in breadth is formed by two parallel chains of mountains. Its banks are generally elevated in Nubia, rising to 1000 ft. or more; they are less so in middle Egypt, and absolutely flat in the delta. From Assuan to the sea the average fall is 2 inches to the mile, and the mean velocity is about 3 miles an hour. At the delta its waters spread out into numerous streams in the form of a triangle, whose base extends to a space of 120 miles, between the Rosetta branch and the Damietta branch. The ordinary width of the Nile is Egypt above the delta is about 700 yards, but it enlarges in a few places to 1100 yards. The branches through the delta are so shallow in the dry season that vessels exceeding 40 tons burden cannot pass through them. The Mahmoudiyeh Canal connects the Rosetta arm of the Nile with Alexandria. For a great distance in its course through the eastern Sudan the Nile is obstructed by vast masses of floating vegetable matter tangled and intermatted so as to oppose a barrier to the passage of vessels. Great efforts have been made of late to break up these obstructions which are known as 9 dds.

A rain scarcely ever falls in the valley of the Nile from the 18th to nearly the 30th parallel of latitude, and very scantily even lower down the river owes its supplies wholly to the copious rains of the countries whereto it rises. It begins to increase in June, attains its greatest height about the autumnal equinox, and then subsides as gradually as it rose. The ordinary rise at Cairo is about 40 feet. During the flood a great portion of the delta and of the valley of Egypt higher up is inundated. In Nubia also and Dongola extensive tracts are watered immediately by the river but in general its banks above Egypt are irrigated by means of the water wheel. The Nile is the only large African river that discharges its waters into the Mediterranean.

The alluvium with which the Nile is always charged especially during the inundation is chiefly due to the Bahr-el Awek, which brings down the decayed vegetable matter and the degraded volcanic rocks from Abyssinia that make the Nile the great fertiliser of Egypt. The Nile is not a gable for the greater part of its length the principal obstructions being found at Abu Hammed (near the foot of the fifth cataract) and Wadi Halfa (the foot of the second cataract). Large vessels ascend to Assuan (now passed by a navigable canal, with locks 1½ miles long) where the first cataract about 3 miles in length and having a fall of 10 feet begins. In the second cataract the river falls 210 feet in 12½ miles. In the course between Khartum (about 50 miles above the sixth cataract) and Assuan a distance of 11½ miles the river falls 600 feet. The distances in miles, measured along the windings of the Nile from the Hamlet mouth are to Cairo 164 Stat. 430. heah 581 Assuan 774, first cataract 770. Derr 933 second cataract 1029 third cataract 1258 fourth cataract 1454 fifth cataract 1679 Atbara River 139 sixth cataract 1898. In north of the Bahr-el Awek 1948. Kah 2133 Bahr-el Ghazal 2858, Gondokoro 3258 cataract of Meru 3461 Keruma Falls 3570 Ripon Falls 3766 and to the source of the principal feeder of the Victoria Nyanza on the W. 4100 miles. Works looking to the regulation and storage of the waters of the Nile have been constructed on the vastest scale. They comprise the barrage constructed by Mehemot Ali (15 miles NW of Cairo) the colossal dam (averaging 60 feet in height and penetrated by 190 openings) built over the river near Assuan and the barrage at Siot (Assiet). The holding or impounding capacity of the Assuan reservoir is estimated to be 37 500 000 000 cubic feet which will serve as an enormous reserve to hundreds of thousands of acres of land requiring irrigation. A railway follows the course of the Nile (departing from it for a comparatively short stretch below Abu Hammed) from the sea to Khartum. The scenery of the Nile, especially where its valley is hemmed in by great rock masses, is strikingly beautiful. The river which was sacred to the ancient Egyptians, presents a succession of the most stupendous monuments of antiquity. The great problem of the sources of the Nile was settled by the discoveries of Burton, Speke and Baker (1858-64) and the subsequent explorations of Livingston and Stanley. North Bridgeton, a post-village of Cumberland co., Me., on Long Lake, about 42 miles NNW of Portland, on the Bridgeton and Saco River R. Pop. about 350.

North Bridgewater, a post-hamlet of Onondaga co., N. Y. 3 miles from Richfield Junction.

North Bristol, a post-village of Trumbull co., Ohio, 28 miles NNW of Youngstown. Pop. 254.

North Bristol, a post-village of Dane co., Wis. Pop. 68.

North Broadalbin, a post-village of Fulton co., N. Y., 43 miles NW of Albany. Pop. 120.

North Bromsgrove, a town of England in Worcestershire, adjoining Bromsgrove. Pop. in 1901 5433.

Northbrook, a post-station and township of Lincoln co., N. C. Pop. of the town in 1900 3354.

Northbrook, a post-village of Chester co., Pa., on the Philadelphia and Reading R., 23 miles NW of Wilmington, Del. Pop. 100.

North Brookfield, a banking post-village in North Brookfield township (town), Worcester co., Mass., about 15 miles W of Worcester, on the Boston and Albany R. It has heat- and steam-industries. Pop. of the town in 1900, 4557.

North Brookfield, a post-village of Madison co., N. Y. on the Lackawanna R. 27 miles SSW of Utica. Pop. about 300.

North Brookfield, Queens co., Nova Scotia, on the Port Medway River, 26 miles from Bridgewater.

Northbrook Island, one of the land-masses of Franz Josef Land, crossed by the parallel of lat 80° N.

North Brooklynn, a post-village of Hancock co., Me. on an inlet of the sea, about 25 miles ESE. of Belfast. Pop. 160.

North Brookville, a post-village of Hancock co., Me., about 22 miles E. of Bangor. Pop. 200.

North Brunswick, a township of Middlesex co., N. J. Pop. in 1900 547.

North Buckfield, a post-village of Oxford co., Me., about 20 miles VNW of Lewiston. Pop. 173.

North Buckport, a post-village of Hancock co., Me., about 6 miles E of Bangor. Pop. 200.

North Buenavista (bu a-nah-vee-sta), a post-village of Clayton co., Iowa, on the Mississippi River, 24 miles NW of Dubuque. Pop. 120.

North Buffalo, a post-village in North Buffalo township Armstrong co., Pa., 32 miles NE of Pittsburgh. Pop. in 1900 1089 of the village, about 60.

Northburch, a post-village of Fulton co., N. Y. The banking point is Johnstown. Pop. 150.

North Byron, a post-hamlet of Kent co., Mich. on the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern R. 10 miles S of Grand Rapids.

North Caldwell, a borough of Essex co., N. J. Pop. in 1900 187.

North Cambridge, a former post-village of Middlesex co., Mass. about 6 miles NW of Boston. It is now a part of Cambridge (post-station of Boston).

North Cambridge, a post-village of Lamoille co., Vt., about 25 miles ENE of Burlington. Pop. 150.

North Camerote, a post-station of Stanben co., N. Y., 6 miles SSW of Bath.

North Canaan, a township (town) of Litchfield co., Conn. has beds of iron ore. Pop. in 1900, 1803.

North Canara (or Kannara, kān ā ra) the southernmost district of the Bombay presidency bounded W by the Arabian Sea. Capital Karwar.

North Canton, a post-village of Hartford co., Conn. about 17 miles NW of Hartford. Pop. about 175.

North Cape, a promontory forming with the Knivik (Krodder) (or knife-sharp point) the northernmost point of Europe, and situated on the N. extremity of the island of Magerø, which is separated from the main-land of Norway by a narrow channel. Lat 71° 11' 40" N. lon 25° 46' E.

It consists of a long row of precipitous rocks jutting out into the sea and terminating above, partly in pyramidal peaks and partly in a table-land. Height, 968 feet.

North (or Sievernol, se-ā vēr-nol) Cape, a head-land on the N. coast of Siberia. Lat. 68° 55' N. lon 178° 51' E.

North Cape, the NE. extremity of the island of Cape Breton. Lat 47° 4' N. lon 60° 21' W.

North Cape, on the N. coast of Prince Edward Island Gulf of St. Lawrence. Lat. 47° 6' N.; lon 63° 57' W.

North Cape (Port Cabo de Norte, kā do non-tā) South America, on the N. coast of Brazil, at the northernmost mouth of the Amazon.

North, or O'tee' (Oton) Cape, the N. extremity of New Zealand.

Northcape, a post-village of Racine co., Wis. 8 miles W of Frankville station. Pop. 80.

North Carmel, a post-village of Penobscot co., Me. 2 miles N of Carmel and about 15 miles W by N of Bangor. Pop. 290.

North Carolina, a south Atlantic state of the American Union, bounded N. by Virginia, E. and SE. by the Atlantic Ocean, S. by South Carolina and Georgia, and W. by Tennessee. It lies between 33° 54' and 36° 33' N. lat. Its greatest length, E. and W., is 400 miles; extreme breadth, 135 miles. Area of the land-surface, 48,500 sq. m.; of the appertaining waters 3070 sq. m.

Face of the Country—Along the W. border runs the Great Smoky (or Iron) Mountain range and at a considerable distance southward runs, in a nearly parallel course, what is here the main chain of the Alleghenies, continuous southward with the Blue Ridge of Virginia. Between these ridges there are various parallel, transverse, and scattered ranges and groups of mountains rising from a plateau elevated from 5500 to 6000 feet. Of these the highest in the state, or in any part of the Appalachian system, are the Black Mountains, of which Mitchell's Peak

(or Black Dome) attains the height of 6711 ft. It is the highest summit of the Outer B. of the Rocky Mountains. Southwestward are the Bald, Double, Green, and other ranges, and along the South Carolina boundary line the Blue Ridge extends westward and for some distance marks the limit of the state. A considerable number of the summits of the state exceed 6000 ft. in height. Among these are Chimney Dome, on the Tennessee border, 6512 ft.; Mount Olin, 6501 ft.; Baldy Bear, 6561 ft.; Cataldi Peak, 6511 ft.; Mount Buckley, 6509 ft.; and Balsam Cone, 6471 ft. The Blue Ridge declines eastward into an elevated tract, W. of the Oatawa and Yadkin rivers, and this plateau supports some mountain-outliers and broken hills. The mountain country is wonderfully picturesque and healthful and affords good grazing, and corn-land, with much hard timber. Next eastward lies the midland (or Piedmont) section with its varied surfaces and excellent soils, adapted to the growth of cotton, tobacco, and the cereals. The coast-lands, extending back for 80-100 or 150 miles form the pine country, where the long-leaf pine affords abundance of timber and naval stores. The region includes some 2,000,000 acres of swamps, of which the Great and Little Dismal Alligator, Angola, Green, and Holly Shelter swamps are among the most extensive. This tract also contains much productive land.

Coast-line, Rivers, etc.—A remarkable range or rampart, consisting of low sand-islands, fences the coast proper of North Carolina, cutting off its shallow lagoons and tranquil sounds from the open sea. These islands present three principal capes—Hatteras, Lookout, and Fear—whose outlying shoals render navigation extremely dangerous. Onslow and Beaufort bays are the intervals between the three capes. Within the sand-rampart are Pamlico, Albemarle, and Currituck sounds, shallow, brackish, and nearly tideless expanses of water, connected with the sea through a few inlets of which Coreoke and Hatteras inlets are the principal. The ports of entry are Wilmington, Newbern, Beaufort, and Elizabeth City. Currituck Sound communicates with Norfolk, Va., through the Dismal Swamp Canal, which is navigated by steamers. The Cape Fear River formed by the Dan and the Haw the Roanoke and the Neuse, and the Chowan, Tar and Pamlico offer together several hundred miles of navigable waters. The Yadkin becomes in South Carolina the Great Pedee, the Catawba becomes the Wateree, and the Broad the Congaree. In the W. the Hatteras, Tuckahoe, and French Broad break through the mountain-wall of the state and enter Tennessee.

Objects of interest to tourists are very numerous. Among them are Mitchell's Peak, the deep Swannano (Swanano) Gap, Catawba Falls, Pilot, Ross Grandfather's, Grandmother's, Bald, and King's mountains, the last-named partly in South Carolina the gorge of the French Broad River the remarkable remains of prehistoric aboriginal life, such as burial fields, copper mines, mounds, etc., the Chimney, Painted Rock, Blowing Rock (with its enormous precipice), and the warm springs of Swannano co.

Geology. Minerals.—The mountain-region and most of the middle section are underlain by richly crystalline Ancestral strata. Eastward they are bounded by a narrow but irregular belt of the Cambrian (Silurian), which crosses the state, running from the neighborhood of Oxford and Roxboro on the N.E. to that of Monroe and Rockingham on the S.W. Along the eastern side of this belt runs a narrow strip of the Triassic, interesting for its remarkable beds of coal developed chiefly in the valley of the navigable Deep River. Beyond this there lies S.W. of Danville, Va., another Triassic region, also containing coal. The coals of the Deep River bed are of every grade, from perfect graphite and excellent anthracite to the bituminous gas-coal and the half bituminous smiths coal. Coal-mining, however, has not yet attained large proportions. The total product of the state in 1903 was 17,500 short tons, valued at $25,200. Most of the lower, midland, and coast belts are of Tertiary and Quaternary age, with some strips where the Cretaceous is laid bare in the river-valleys. The mineral wealth of North Carolina is considerable, but the product of the mines is restricted. Gold, which is mined chiefly in Cabarrus, Mocklenburg, Lincoln, and Rowan co. was wrought in 1903 to the extent of 2413 fine ounces, valued at $76,500; silver 11,000 fine ounces, valued at $5940; iron (brown hematite and magnetite) 75,492 long tons, valued at $99,000. Lead, copper and zinc are also mined and smelted, and platinum, palladium, and diamonds have been found sparingly. Altim is probably mined in Mitchell, Cleveland, and Yancey co. Altim, graphite, jade, berylstone, granite, kaolin, limestone, whetstone, gneiss, soapstone, and corundum are found, the latter in special abundance.

Climate, Natural Products, etc.—The mountain-country has a delightful summer and autumnal climate and a bracing and not too severe winter, and has become a resort for health and pleasure (Asheville, etc.). Its scenery is striking and richly varied, and its trout and game attract the angler and sportsman. In this region, part of which has sometimes been designated the "Land of the Sky," the eye is delighted with a rich and dense vegetation (of laurel, magnolia, rhododendron, etc.), which in some parts covers the mountains to their summits. The coast-region has a damp and warm summer climate and near the swamps fevers and malarial diseases prevail, although the dry pine woods are exceptionally healthful and are especially free from pulmonary complaints. The middle section is generally healthful also, and combines the characters of the other two regions. The normal maximum temperature for the lower regions of the state is about 100°; and the minimum about 20°. The average annual rainfall for the state is about 55 inches. Besides the valued pine (long-leaf and loblolly pines) of the low region, we may mention the cypress, cedar, oak, hickory, ash, walnut, and other kinds of excellent timber which the state affords. The native fruits include the persimmon, the huckleberry, and other excellent wild grapes, the Chickasaw plum and the cranberry which is gathered for export. Large amounts of ginger, snake-root, pink root, yellow jamaica, false vanilla, and other wild medicinal and aromatic herbs are marketed from North Carolina. Abundant in this state is the interesting Dismal (or Yanna's fly-trap). Here grows the yarrow (or yupon) a kind of holly, closely kindred to Paraguay tea. Its leaves are very commonly employed as a substitute for tea, and of it the Indians made their narcotic cocoa (or black drink). The forests afford great amounts of pine timber and spars for the general market, and yield a large share of the world's supply of naval stores, including rosin, oil of turpentine, raw turpentine, tar and pitch. Among the native animals are deer, bears, wolves, raccoons, opossums, etc. In the E. the alligator is seen. Of venomous serpents the state has the rattlesnake, cotton mouth moccasin and some species of Elops.

Agriculture.—The culture of cotton has lately extended northward and westward in this state, and the cotton product of North Carolina bears an exceptionally high character in the market. The crop of commercial cotton, for the year 1900 was 459,707 bales. All parts of the state afford much maize. Tobacco has long been one of the leading products. Sweet potatoes are largely grown. Spring market vegetables are quite extensively raised for sale in the northern cities. Rice does well in the swamps, especially southward. Apples, peaches, pears and grapes thrive exceedingly well. Dried fruits are becoming a staple of export. The cultivation of the vine has become a profitable occupation and honey and beeswax form a considerable source of revenue in the eastern district, and in the production of peanuts the state holds third place among the states of the Union. The leading agricultural crops in 1900 were corn 39,736,189 bushels; wheat, 5,960,905 bushels; oats, 5,044,117 bushels; rye, 411,287 bushels; potatoes, 1,043,474 bushels and hay 175,630 tons. Stock-raising is the leading pursuit in the W. The quantity of wool and unwashed wool obtained from the west-side of 1900, was 1,117,485 pounds.

Commerce, Fisheries, Manufactures.—North Carolina exports, countries and to foreign countries, large quantities of naval stores, lumber and other forest products, cotton, tobacco, flour and fish. The sounds and rivers give a large annual catch of shad, herring (or alewives), and bass (or rock) and the mullet, sheepshead and bluefish (or taylor) are also abundantly taken. The leading manufacturing industries of the state are the manufacture of cotton goods the sawing of lumber and the production of rosin, tar, pitch, turpentine-oil, cotton-seed oil (largely used in the making of fertilisers), tobacco and flour. The value of the cotton product in 1900 was $28,372,708 while the lumber and timber product for the same period was valued at $14,842,462, and that of tobacco at $13,630,616. Metallurgical and mining operations are carried on to some extent. Important iron-smelting works were in operation here during the war of 1861-65 producing metal of peculiar excellence. Carriage- and shoe-making, cooperage, tanning, and quite a varied manufacturing industry are carried on in and near some of the larger towns.

Education.—Among the important institutions of learning are the University of North Carolina, at Chapel Hill; North Carolina College (Lutheran) at Mt. Pleasant; the State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts; Davidson College, at Davidson; Trinity College (Methodist Episcopal), at Durham; Guilford College (Friends), at Guilford College; and St. Mary's College (Roman Catholic) at Belmont. The higher institutions for colored are Shaw University at Raleigh, the Agricultural and Mechanical College, at Greensboro; Siddle University, at Charlotte; and Livingstone College, at Salisbury.

Railroads.—In 1840 this state had 263 miles of railroad in 1860, 937 miles, in 1870, 1178 miles, in 1880, 1499 miles; in 1890, 3123 miles and in 1900, 3999 miles.

The counties are 97 in number to wit: Alamance, Alexander, Alleghany, Anson, Ashe, Beaufort, Bertie, Bladen, Brunswick, Buncombe, Burke, Cabarrus, Caldwell, Camden, Carteret, Caswell, Catawba, Chatham, Cherokee, Chowan, Clay, Cleveland, Columbus, Craven, Cumberland, Currituck, Dare, Davidson, Davis, Duplin, Durham, Edgecombe, Forsyth, Franklin, Gaston, Gates, Graham, Granville, Greene, Guilford, Halifax, Harnett, Haywood, Henderson, Hertford, Hyde, Iredell, Jackson, Johnston, Jones, Lenoir, Lincoln, McDowell, Macon, Madison, Martin, Mecklenburg, Mitchell, Montgomery, Moore, Nash, New Hanover, Northampton, Onslow, Orange, Pamlico, Pasquotank, Pender, Perquimans, Person, Pitt, Polk, Randolph, Richmond, Robeson, Rockingham, Rowan, Rutherford, Sampson, Scotland, Stanley, Stokes, Surry, Swain, Transylvania, Tyrrell, Union, Vance, Wake, Warren, Washington, Watauga, Wayne, Wilkes, Wilson, Yadkin, and Yancey.

The principal towns and cities in 1900 were Wilmington the principal seaport (pop. 30,976), Charlotte (13,691), Asheville (14,664), Raleigh the capital (12,643), Greensboro (16,435), Winston (16,048), Concord (7019), Durham, Elizabeth City, Salisbury and Newbern.

Government etc.—The governor and state officers are chosen for a term of 4 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives the members of each being elected for 2 years. The state has 16 representatives in the lower house of Congress.

The population in 1790 was 393,761, in 1800 487,163, in 1810 555,500, in 1820 638,239, in 1830 737,967, in 1840 753,419, in 1850 809,039, in 1860 801,623, of whom 629,942 were whites, 321,049 slaves and 39,483 free colored in 1870 1,071,341, in 1880 1,809,760, in 1890 1,617,947, in 1900, 1,843,816, of whom 624,423 were colored. The foreign born population in 1900 was only 4492. The people were originally of English stock with large subsequent additions of Scotch-Irish and Highland-Scotch elements.

History.—In 1585 and 1587 Raleigh planted colonies upon Roanoke Island, but the first permanent settlements were made by Virginians near the northern border. In 1663 the province of Carolina was granted by Charles II. to a number of lords proprietors. It was divided into two parts, North Carolina and South Carolina. The philosopher Locke devised for Carolina a fantastic form of government, with an aristocracy of landgraves and cadiques and for a time this was in partial operation. Some of the Indian tribes (Corea, Tuscarora, Nottoway etc. principally of Iroquois stock) attacked the colonists, but in 1712 the greater part were subdued, and the Tuscarora at once went northward and joined the Five (then six) Nations in the New York province. In 1729 North Carolina became a separate royal province. The colony took an early stand for independence and became one of the thirteen original states of the Union. In 1861 a state convention passed an ordinance of secession. The most important operations in this state during the Civil War were at Roanoke Island, Newbern, Fort Fisher, Avery'sboro and Bentonville. It was the last important battle-ground in the struggle, which was virtually closed with the surrender of General Johnston to Sherman on April 26, 1865, at Durham Station. The reconstruction of the state was completed in 1868. North Carolina, a banking post-town of Carroll co., Minn. Pop. in 1900 189.

North Carver, a post-village of Plymouth co. Mass. about 10 miles E. of Taunton. Pop. 275.

North Castino (kas-tin') a post-village of Hancock co. Me., on the E. side of Penobscot Bay about 34 miles S. of Bangor. Pop. 104.

Northcastle, a post-hamlet in Northcastle township (town) Westchester co. N. Y. about 38 miles NNE. of New York city. Pop. of the town in 1900 1471.

North Cedar, a post-village of Jefferson co. Kan.

North Charleston, a borough of Washington co. Pa., formerly a part of Bedford township. Pop. in 1900 425.

North Charlestown, a post-village of Sullivan co. N. H. on the Connecticut River and on the Central Vermont R., 14 miles SSW. of Claremont. Pop. 75.

North Chatham, a post-village of Barnstable co., Mass., on Pleasant Bay near the sea, about 54 miles E. of New Bedford. Pop. 160.

North Chatham, a post-village of Carroll co., N. H., about 46 miles N. of Oostep.

North Chatham, a post-village of Columbia co. N. Y. on Kinderhook Creek, about 16 miles SSE. of Albany, on the Albany and Hudson R. Pop. 100.

North Chelmsford, a post-village of Middlesex co., Mass., on the Merrimack River and on the Boston and Maine R., 3 miles W. of Lowell.

North Chomung, a post-village of Chomung co. N. Y. The banking point is Elmira. Pop. 150.

North Chester, a post-hamlet of Hampshire co. Mass., on the Middle Branch of the Westfield River 24 miles NW. of Springfield.

North Chester, a post-village of Windsor co. Vt. on the Central Vermont R., 37 miles SSE. of Rutland. Pop. 68.

North Chesterville, a post-village of Franklin co. Me., about 60 miles NW. of Augusta. Pop. 100.

North Chicago, a banking post-village of Lake co. Ill., on the Chicago and Northwestern and the Elgin, Joliet and Eastern R., 0 miles from Waukegan. It has saw-works, manufactures of gas-plants, machinery and castings, etc. Pop. about 1150.

North Chichester, a post-village of Merrimack co. N. H., 9 miles ENE. of Concord.

North Chili, a post-village of Monroe co. N. Y. 10 miles WSW. of Rochester on the New York Central and Hudson River R. Pop. 175.

North Chillicothe, a post-town of Peoria co., Ill., in Chillicothe township. Pop. in 1900 417.

North Clarendon, a post-village of Warren co. Pa. The banking point is Warren. It manufactures gas-engines, tanks and boilers, and has oil interests. Pop. about 1504.

North Clarendon, a post-village of Rutland co. Vt., on Otter Creek and on the Rutland R. 3 miles S. of Rutland. Pop. about 300.

North Clayton, a post-station of Crawford co. W. Va.

Northclove, a post-village of Dutchess co. N. Y. Pop. about 60.

North Clymer, a post-village of Chautauque co., N. Y., 35 miles S. by W. of Dunkirk.

North Coaticook, a post-village of Stanstead co. Quebec, 1 mile from Coaticook, its banking point.

North Codorus, a township of York co., Pa. Pop. in 1900 2637.

North Cohasset, a village of Norfolk co., Mass., on the sea-shore near Nantasket Beach, 13 miles SE. of Boston.

North Cohocton, a post-village of Steuben co., N. Y., 15 miles E. of Danville. Pop. about 350.

North Colebrook, a post-station of Litchfield co. Conn. about 35 miles WNW. of Hartford.

North Coleraine, a post-village of Browne co., N. Y., 16 miles NE. of Binghamton. Pop. 100.

North Collins, a banking post-village of Erie co., N. Y. in North Collins township (town) on the Erie R., 23 miles S. of Buffalo. It has various mills and manufactures of crates and baskets. Pop. about 605 of the town in 1900 2382.

North Columbia, a post-village of Nevada co., Cal., 104 miles N. of Nevada City. Pop. about 200.

North Concord, a post-hamlet of Essex co. Vt. 12 miles E. of St. Johnsbury.

North Constantine, a post-village of Oswego co. N. Y. 1 mile from Constantia. Pop. 100.

North Conway, a banking post-village and summer-resort of Carroll co. N. H., on the E. bank of the Saco River and on the Boston and Maine and the Maine Central R., 60 miles WNW. of Portland, Me. It is surrounded by beautiful mountain-scenery and commands a fine prospect of the White Mountains. Pop. about 1449. Elevation 629 feet.

North Cornville, a post-village of Somerset co., Me., 10 miles N. of Skowhegan. Pop. 100.

Northcote, a post-village of Kitson co., Minn., on the Great Northern R. The banking point is Hallock. Pop. 120.

Northcove, a post-station and township of McDowell co., N. C. in a valley at the base of the Blue Ridge, 15 miles N. of Marion. Pop. of the township in 1900 1307.

Northcove, a post-station of Pacific co., Wash., on the N. side of Shoalwater Bay.

North Cove Creek, N. C., enters the Catawba from the N. in Burke co.

North Coventry, a village of Tolland co., Conn. The banking point is Rockville and the post-office Coventry.

North Coventry, a township of Chester co. Pa., is bounded on the N. by the Schuylkill River, which separates it from Pottstown. Pop. in 1900 1664.

North Craftsbury, a post-village of Orleans co., Vt., about 39 miles NNE. of Montpelier. Pop. about 400.

North Cranston, a post-village of Forest co., W. Va., 244 miles E. of Rhineclander on the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie R. Pop. 160.

Northcreek, a post-hamlet of Phillips co., Ark., 3 miles from Marvel station.

Northcreek, a post-village of Warren co., N. Y. on the Hudson River, at the mouth of North Creek and on the Delaware and Hudson R. 27 miles N. of Saugerties Springs. Pop. about 505. It has manufactures of harness.

North Collins, a post-village of Albany co., N. Y., on the Schoharie Valley Canal, 3 miles E. of Otsa. Pop. 154.

North Oronotawaga, a post-village of San Bernardino co., Cal., on the Atchafalaya, Topinka, and Santa Fe Canal lines. The banking point is Ontario or San Bernardino. Pop. 144.

North Outler, a post-station of Washington co., Mo. North Dakota, a north-central state of the American Union, bounded N by Manitoba and Assinibola, E by Minnesota, S by South Dakota and W by Montana. Its northern limit is 49° N lat. Its eastern boundary is the navigable Red River of the North, and the meridian of 104° W lon defines its western limit. Area of the land-surface, 70,195 sq. m.; of the appertaining waters, 666 sq. m.

Face of the Country.—The general elevation of the state is between 800–1000 feet (valley of the Red River of the North) in the E and 2000–2800 ft in the W and SW. Sentinel Butte, on the line of the Northern Pacific R., is 2709 ft. Much of the land is flat plain or undulating prairie. The Missouri River enters the state from the W and pursues its course to the SE, through a region of high plains and plateaus. With its tributaries it drains the western and southwestern sections of the state. Its principal affluents are the Yellowstone, which joins it shortly after both streams have crossed the western border of the state, the Little Missouri, Big Knife, Heart and Cannon Ball rivers. The northern and eastern portions of the state belong to the Canadian system of drainage, the chief waters in this section being the Shegane and Pembina rivers, which discharge into the Red River of the North, and the Souris (or Mouse) River which is a tributary of the Assinibola. The region of eastern drainage is defined on the W by the upper waters of the James (Pepeton) or Dakota River (which flows southward into South Dakota) and the Mouse River already referred to. Westward of this section is the Plateau de Coteau du Missouri, a hilly and somewhat stony tract extending from the NW corner of the state southeastward to South Dakota. Between the basins of the Mouse River and the Red River of the North is a limited area of interior drainage with no outflow to the sea. It contains a large salt lake, known as Devil's Lake, a picturesque sheet of water about 40 miles long which is now accessible by railroad. Its briny waters resemble those of the ocean both in appearance and in taste and afford opportunities for sea-bathing in the interior of the continent. E of the Missouri River the surface is prairie broken at first by the cottonwood then rolling, and finally becoming a flat level plain slightly inclined towards the E and N. The valley of the Red River of the North is the bed of an ancient lake (Lake Agassiz) which existed in prehistoric times, extending eastward into Minnesota and northward into Manitoba. It now contains many lakes and streams and numerous dry coulees or beds of streams where the water has ceased to flow. Within its limits are the most productive portions of the famous wheat-fields of this state. Along the beds of the rivers and surrounding the lakes are heavy belts of timber largely cottonwood or poplar but the greater part of the state is treeless, growing chiefly the grass and low herbage of the prairie.

Geology.—Nearly all the surface rocks belong to the Cretaceous period and are covered for the most part, except in the SW by drift. There are extensive deposits of lignitic coal, of which there were mined, in 1901 161,891 short tons, valued at $214,151 and in 1903, 273,648 tons, valued at $418,000. Salt springs and streams are numerous in portions of the Red River valley.

Climate.—The air is dry and invigorating. The climate is as a whole remarkably healthful and in summer and autumn is peculiarly delightful, although extremes of summer temperatures (100°–110°) have been noted equal to those of the far south. The winters are severe, the mercury sometimes falling to 40° below zero, but with the absence of the humidity which is characteristic of the atmosphere in the eastern part of the country a greater degree of cold can be borne with comparatively little discomfort. Although there are at times great snow-storms or "blizzards," the fall of snow is, as a rule, very light when compared with that of the states in the east. Farming operations begin in April, and as the spring is seldom backward, they are not interrupted by the return of unfavorable weather. Long days of sunshine prevail in summer and the high temperature which promotes the growth of vegetation is commonly relieved by refreshing prairie breezes during the night. The rainfall is never very heavy but most of it comes during the spring and early summer months, so as to be generally sufficient to mature the crops. The average annual precipitation for the state barely exceeds 17 inches. In some sections irrigation is necessary.

Agriculture.—Wheat is the important agricultural product and will probably always be the chief staple. The Red River valley is unsurpassed on the continent as a wheat-growing region and Dakota wheat is known the world over for its superiority. Wheat-growing in this state is conducted on the grandest scale. It is by no means uncommon to have single fields or farms of 20,000 acres or even more devoted to the cultivation of this cereal. Corn, oats, barley, flax, rye, and potatoes are valuable crops. The chief agricultural crops in 1900 were wheat, 15,176,512 bushels; oats, 8,299,354 bushels; barley, 1,993,640 bushels; corn, 381,184 bushels; rye, 83,990 bushels; potatoes, 1,336,860 bushels; and hay 247,337 tons. Stock-raising is an important industry in the western section. The amount of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1900 was 2,324,328 pounds. As yet the manufacturers are mainly of the domestic type.

Railroads.—In 1878 there were in the whole territory of Dakota only 320 miles of railroad. In 1890 the state of North Dakota had 2116 miles, while the total mileage in 1900 was 2820. During certain seasons of the year the Missouri River and the Red River of the North afford important highways for commerce and travel.

Cities and Towns.—The state had in 1900 39 counties—viz. Barnes, Benson, Billings, Bottineau, Burleigh, Cass, Cavalier, Dickey, Eddy, Emmons, Foster, Grand Forks, Griggs, Kidder, LaMoure, Logan, McHenry, McIntosh, Morton, Morton Nelson, Oliver, Pembina, Pierce, Ramsey, Ransom, Richland, Rolette, Sargent, Stark, Steele, Stutsman, Towner, Traill, Walsh, Ward, Wells, and Williams. Alfred, Bowman, Dunn, Hettinger, Mountrail, and Wallace co. have been organized since the official census. The principal towns are Fargo (pop. in 1900, 8589), Bismarck, the capital (1219), and Grand Forks (1652).

Government.—The governor is elected for a term of 2 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives the members of the former elected for 4 years and those of the latter for 2 years. The state has 2 representatives in the national Congress.

Education.—Ample appropriations of land were made, in the act creating North Dakota as a state, for the future support of the common schools as well as for the maintenance of institutions of a higher grade. The leading educational institutions are the University of North Dakota at Grand Forks, Red River Valley University at Wahpeton, Fargo College, normal schools at Mayville and Valley City and North Dakota Agricultural College and Experiment Station at Fargo.

Population.—The population in 1880 for the corresponding part of Dakota Territory was 33,909. The total population for the state in 1890 was 132,719 and in 1900 218,148. The bulk of the inhabitants are foreign-born or of foreign parentage, the foreign-born alone in 1900 having numbered 112,691.

History.—North Dakota is a part of the region included in the Louisiana purchase of 1803. A fort was established at Fort Berthia in 1816 by Lord Selkirk who supposed this region to be British territory and to belong to his colony of Assinibola. The territory of Dakota was organized in 1861, including at that time parts of what is now Montana and Wyoming. It was reduced in area in 1889 the states of North and South Dakota were admitted into the Union.

North Sea, or German Ocean (Ger. Nordsee, north or Drutches Meer; dutch/ger. main sea. German's ocean. Ma'r or German's ocean) an arm of the Atlantic Ocean extending from the Strait of Dover to the Shetland Islands and bounded E. by Norway and Denmark S. by Germany the Netherlands, Belgium, and France and W. by the British Isles. Length, 700 miles extreme breadth, 450 miles. Area, approximately 190,000 sq. m. On the NE it forms a wide arm called the Skagerrak, 50 miles broad, which separates Norway from Denmark. This again communicates southward with the Cattegat, a great arm between Sweden and Denmark and the Cattegat communicates with the Baltic by the 3 straits called the Sound (Oresund) and the Great and Little Belts. The shores of the countries that surround the North Sea are in general deeply indented with bays and arms (Fjorde) and bordered by steep cliffs or mountains only in the SE. and S. (Denmark Germany the Netherlands and Belgium) are three long reaches of flat land. The water is deepest on the Norwegian side, where, at the entrance to the Skagerrak (whence a current constantly passes westward) a sounding of 240 fathoms has been made, and where, within the limits of the Skagerrak in lat. 59° 12' N. lon. 9° 30' E. a sounding has been made of 443 fathoms (2632 feet). In general the depth varies from 15-35 fathoms in the southerly parts to 30-75 fathoms in the N. The bed of this sea is traversed by several enormous banks such as the Great and Little Fisher banks, the Jutland Bank, and the Dogger Bank the last-named occupying the centre of the southern half of the sea-area. As parts of the North Sea may be mentioned Moray Firth, the firths of Tay and Forth the Wash the Humber and Thames estuaries the estuaries of the Scheldt, Meuse, and Rhine the Zuyder Zee and the estuaries of the Elbe, Weser, and Elbe. The great oceanic tidal wave which originates in the Atlantic, having swept the W. coasts of Great Britain and Ireland, enters the N. extremity of the North Sea, giving high water nearly simultaneously to the opposite shores of Scotland and Norway. Following its course along the coasts of the former and of England, on which it strikes very directly, with great force, it raises the tides as far S. as the Thames, and also determines the tides of a portion of the English coast. On entering the North Sea on the N. of Scotland, the tidal wave does not exceed 12 feet, but it gradually increases, reaching on the Humber 20 feet. The salinity of the North Sea is somewhat greater than that of the free ocean. But little ice forms and there is little obstruction to navigation except in parts of the immediate shore-line. The fisheries (herring, etc.) in this sea are extensive, as well on the Dogger Bank, celebrated for its cod-fishery, as on all the shores that bound it; they are still greater at its N. extremity, towards the Orkney and Shetland Isles. A great ship canal, the Kaiser Wilhelm Canal, affords a short communication between the North Sea and the Baltic.

Northwest Provinces, the former name of a lieutenant-governorship of British India, now styled the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh.

Northwest Territories, a term sometimes (and still officially) used to designate that portion of the main-land of Canada which is not included in Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba, and British Columbia, and which is constituted by a large area in the Labrador Peninsula, bounded on the W. by Hudson Bay, most of the immense tract extending W. from Hudson Bay to Alaska and British Columbia and the islands, etc. In the Arctic Ocean W. of Greenland. Total area, about 2,600,000 sq. m. This vast tract of land, in the main corresponding to the old Hudson Bay Territory, came into the possession of the Dominion in 1869 and was governed through the lieutenant-governor of Manitoba until 1873 when it became a province, under a lieutenant-governor and council appointed by the Dominion government. From 1888 to 1897 the province was administered by a lieutenant-governor, executive council, and assembly with all the rights of a province except that of borrowing money. In 1897 the Northwest Territories came into full provincial rights. They are divided into eight districts: Keewatin, Amnibola, Alberta, Athabasca, Saskatchewan, Ungava, Franklin and Mackenzie. The province is administered by a lieutenant-governor, a legislative assembly and an advisory executive council, consisting of the lieutenant-governor and 5 members elected by the people. The province sends 2 members to the Dominion senate and, since the redistribution of 1903, 10 members to the house of commons. Yukon district was erected into a judicial district in 1898 and was segregated from the Territories, thus depriving them of about 198,000 sq. m. including the rich gold districts on the Klondike and other rivers. Capital, Regina, in Amnibola district. In a more restricted sense the name Northwest Territories includes only the provincial districts of Amnibola, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Athabasca, and Keewatin, the remaining regions of Ungava, Franklin (with the Arctic islands) and Mackenzie constituting the unorganized territories. See CANADA and the names of the several districts and regions.

Northwest Territory, the designation of the vast region ceded by England to the United States in the treaty of Paris, in 1763, lying between the Ohio River and the Great Lakes and extending from the border of Pennsylvania to the Mississippi River. This territory had been surrendered by France to England at the close of the French and Indian War. Virginia, New York, Massachusetts, and Connecticut laid claim to most of it on the ground of their old charters, but they were soon compelled to relinquish their claims to sovereignty, large tracts of land, however, being assigned to them. In 1787 Congress passed the famous ordinance for the government of the Northwest Territory. Out of this region were subsequently constituted the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin, together with part of Minnesota.

Norway (Norw. Dan. and Sw. Norge nor på Ger-Norwegen, nor på ghen Er Norwidge, nor på ish, L. Noruegia) a country forming the NW portion of Europe and occupying the W and NW parts of the Scandinavian Peninsula. It extends from lat. 57° 57' to 71° 11' 40" N (North Cape, on the island of Magerø) and from lon. 4° 45' to 31° 11' E. It is bounded on the E. by Russian Lapland and Sweden and washed on all other sides by the sea,—by the Arctic Ocean on the N, the Atlantic Ocean on the North Sea on the NW and W., and the Skagerrak on the S. Length, from SSW to NNE, about 1650 miles; the breadth varies from about 20 miles in its narrowest part (in the N) to 300 miles. Area, 124,100 sq. m.

The coast-line consists, for the most part, of bold precipitous cliffs, and is remarkable both for the innumerable islands by which it is lined and the bays or fjords which deeply indent it, sometimes forming excellent harbors. Among the more noted of these fjords are the Varanger (in the NE.), Lyngøen, Fjorden, Trondhjem, Sogne (4900 feet deep), Hardanger, Bukke, and Christiansa (SE.) nearly all of which are characterized by abrupt contours and a landscape of striking beauty and Alpine majesty. The principal islands are those of the Lofoten group (separated from the main-land by the Vestfjord) and, farther N, Magerø, Sørø, Ringvold, Hvalø and Senja. Between these and the main-land there is a wide passage for coasting vessels.

Relief of the Land.—The surface of Norway is very mountainous, particularly in the W and N; but the mountain chains, so called, although in general they have a NE.-SW. trend corresponding to the axis of the peninsula, are more in the nature of elevated plateaus, from which mountain masses rise with the greatest irregularity. The best known or more distinctive parts of these plateaus are: 1. The plateau of Fismark. 2. The plateau of Nordland and Trondhjem extending to the Trondhjem-fjord and Lake Storjungen. 3. The Dovrefield plateau, with its lofty peaks of Snøfjell (7630 feet, at one time thought to be the loftiest summit of Norway) Strimfjell, Snøfjell, and Namsfjell. 4. The Langfjeld plateau, which virtually comprises the remaining northern part of the country, and contains the Galdhøppigen, the culminating point of the Scandinavian Peninsula, and of the broad Ymsfjeld plateau (8400 ft.) the Hornelen, a sharp, jagged peak, 5940 ft. high, and nearly overhanging the sea, at the E. extremity of the island of Bremanger, the Fillefjeld, near the head of the Sognefjord and the Hardanger-fjord. In the region eastward of the Hardanger-fjord is the huge snow and ice plateau, known as the Folgefjord, about 23 miles in length and from 3 to 9 miles in width, with a nearly even summit upward of 4000 ft. in height, from which numerous ice-tongues descend into the radiating valleys. 5. The Rind plateau, the lowest of all, and extending into Sweden where its direction may be traced by the chain of lakes which stretches across that country. The mountains in the N, bordering on Russia, rarely exceed 1000 ft. in height. In general the face of the country is markedly rugged; the valleys are short and abrupt, and the streams form numerous cascades while the fjords, creching by lofty precipitous or towering forests, and the deep and extensive lakes embosomed among the mountains, furnish scenes of the wildest magnificence. Vast glaciers (reaching to within about 5000 ft. of sea-level) descend from the plateaus (Snøfjell, fed by the snow fields of the Folgefjord, Jostedalshorn, in the Sognefjord, the largest glacier of Europe, whose ice-field or forming basin covers upward of 200 sq. m.) The only plains are those formed by the table-lands, and the isolated mountain-peaks on these table-lands rise far above the snow-line.

Rivers.—Norway has no large rivers, but an immense number of minor streams, from the western slope, proceed directly to the shore or the numerous fjords which penetrate it. On the E. slope, again, the streams do little more than commence their course in Norway. The rivers that are of importance have a S. direction and discharge themselves into the Skagerrak. Among them are the Glomma, with its affluent the Lægen (or Løgen); the Drammen, Lægen, Skien-Rid, and Torridalen, but none of them are navigable, except at their mouths, an account of water-falls. Among the more remarkable of these are the Surgenfoss, on the Glomma; the Rjukanfoss, in the district of Telemarken, which falls 513 feet perpendicular; the Vidingfoss, in the district of Hardanger with a perpendicular fall of 630 ft.; and the Skykjesfoss, with a fall of nearly 700 ft. in a nearly consecutive descent of 2000 ft. The most important rivers in the N are the Tana, which forms part of the boundary between Russia and Norway and falls into the Arctic Ocean, and the Vassua, flowing into the Atlantic. The lakes are numerous, the largest being Mjøsen. Many of them are situated at great elevations on the table-land. Among these the Bygdines, from 15 to 30 miles long, is 3490 ft. above the sea.

Climate.—Although a large part of Norway is situated within the frozen zone, various causes contribute to modify the temperature. One of these is the great extent of sea-coast and the large extent of surface occupied by water, and more especially by the fjords which are in immediate communication with the ocean and the temperature of which is sensibly affected by the Gulf Stream drift. The snow lies much higher here than in corresponding latitudes in other countries. The sea (except near the heads of the fjords) never freezes, even at North Cape, but the shallower waters of the Skagerrak are sometimes frozen. The climate is severe only upon the uplands and in the interior bordering upon Sweden. Near Stavanger the mean January temperature is 34.5° and the July temperature 55.5°. The January temperature of Christiansa is 23°. At the North Cape the mean yearly temperature is 35.5°.

The year is nearly divided between winter and summer. Snow covers the ground from the beginning of November till the end of March. Summer lasts from May to September. The climate of the W coast is more southerly parts, though comparatively mild is excessively humid, the rainfall amounting to 70-75 inches annually with a maximum (at Florø) of 80-92 inches. In Nordland the precipitation is in many parts reduced to 45 inches.

Plants and Animals.—Among trees the pines are the most numerous and clothe the mountain-slopes with magnificent forests. The oak forms fine forests in the S. the birch attains the highest northern latitudes. The beech and elm are also properly forest trees, the former extending its range to the 66th parallel of latitude. Of fruit-trees the apple is common in the lower regions and the cherry and plum are widely distributed, yielding even within a short distance of the Arctic Circle.

By far the greater part of the area of Norway is altogether unproductive. About one-fifth is covered with forest. But a very small fraction is under cultivation. Barley is grown as high as 19° N lat. Rye is cultivated up to lat. 59° oats to 68° and 70°, but wheat not beyond 54° and that only in the most favorable seasons. The period of ripening of some of these grains is about the same as in lower latitudes. Potatoes are grown with success even in Fismark. Cattle-rustling is an extensive branch of rural economy, the inhabitants leaving the villages and spending the summer with their flocks and herds in the upper valleys. Most kinds of live-stock are well represented. The reindeer forms the main stock of the northern region. The principal animals of prey are the glutton bear, wolf, lynx, and fox. Game is abundant, including the deer, elk, roe deer, hare, seal, and otter, and, among birds, the grouse and the upland ptarmigan. A remarkable member of the Norwegian mammalian fauna is the migrating lemming. The coast swarms with sea-fowl: the wild geese and ducks of various kinds, including the eider-duck, are numerous; the even appears on the S. coast in winter. In the small uninhabited isles off the N coast vast numbers of the eggs of sea-fowl are procured.

Fisheries.—The fisheries of Norway are of very great value. Whales are captured for use in the manufacture of fertilizer, as well as for their oil but a far more valuable source of revenue is furnished by the cod and herring fisheries. The Lofoten cod fisheries alone give employment to upward of 30,000 fishermen, and the catch has been known to reach in a year upward of 35,000,000 fish. The number of persons engaged throughout the country in the cod-fishery in 1900 was 83,998. In the summer herring fishery 30,705 and in the mackerel fishery, 3741. The rivers and lakes abound in salmon and trout. There are extensive beds of oysters on all the coasts.

Minerals.—The minerals are both numerous and abundant and, where the means of transport exist, can generally be worked to advantage, but the total mining and metallurgical industry is still unimportant. The mines in operation are those of silver, copper, iron, cobalt, chromite, and feldspar. The chief product is iron, the mines of which are situated mostly near the Gulf of Christiansa; the silver-mines of Kongsberg was at one time one of the richest in Europe and, next to the copper-mines of Elvas, the most important in the country. Coal has been found at a number of points on the main-land and also on some of the outlying islands. The other minerals worthy of notice are alum and marble.

Manufactures, Commerce.—The industries of Norway comprise ship-building and the manufacture of foundry products, lumber and wooden-ware, textiles of silk, cotton, wool, and flax, paper, malted liquors, tobacco, leather cordage, glass, pottery, etc. All the seats of industry are on the coast and chiefly on the Gulf of Christiania.

The exportation of fish is the most important branch of trade. Next to this is the export of timber, wooden manufactures, hides, ice, and the products of the mines and metal forges. Fish is exported from all the towns on the W coast, but Bergen is the chief entrepôt. The most important items of this trade are dried fish and salted herrings.

Communication.—The rivers are not navigable except near their mouths, few good roads of any great length exist away from the sea border and the usual communication is by sea. Regular communication has been established between the principal towns on the coast from Christiania to Hammerfest. The number of miles of railway operated in 1901 was 1308.

Government and Population.—Norway was down to 1905 a limited hereditary monarchy. For nearly a century the kingdom had been united with Sweden under one sovereign, having however its own ministry (composed of Norwegians) and its own legislature. The management of common affairs was vested in a council of state composed of Swedes and Norwegians. In 1905 the nation severed its connection with Sweden. The legislative assembly or as it is called, Storting (from stær, great, and ting, court) is elected by the citizens and exists for three years, when a new election takes place. It is subdivided into two chambers,—one consisting of one-fourth of the members and called the Lagthing and the other of three-fourths, and called the Odelsting. These chambers meet separately and each nominate its own president and secretary. Every bill must originate in the Odelsting. The members of the Storting are chosen by indirect election the voters voting for electors who elect the deputies. Universal suffrage exists. A voter must have completed his twenty-fifth year. There are no titles of nobility in Norway. The capital is Christiania.

The population of Norway according to the census of 1900 was 2,239,898. The increase in the decade preceding was 12 per cent. The country is divided into 26 districts or amter (amter) as follows:

Amter	Pop in 1900	Amter	Pop in 1900
Christiania (town)	227,096	Søndre Bergenhus	156,756
Akershus	114,225	Bergen (town)	72,351
Oslohusene	134,886	Nordre Bergenhus	99,941
Hedemarken	126,182	Semland	156,137
Christiansand	116,280	Søndre Trondhjem	131,368
Buskens	115,678	Nordre Trondhjem	83,828
Jæderberg og Lærdal	104,554	Nordland	159,144
Bratsberg	98,922	Trøndelag	74,368
Molde	79,325	Finnmark	33,900
Lister og Mandal	81,567
Stavanger	127,598	Total	2,239,898

About 24 per cent of the inhabitants are Swedes. There are about 20,000 Laps and 8000 Finns. The foreign born population is insignificant. The five largest cities are Christiania (the capital), Bergen, Trondheim, Stavanger and Drammen. The Lutheran religion is the national church, supported by the state. At the head of the educational institutions is the University of Christiania. School education is compulsory. The Norwegians are a branch of the Scandinavian race. Danish (with a pronunciation somewhat different from what is heard in Denmark) is the speech of the educated classes and the language of modern Norwegian literature. Various Norwegian dialects vary close to the Danish are spoken by the peasantry.

History.—The history of Norway prior to the ninth century is enveloped in fable. Towards the close of that century the country, hitherto divided among several rulers, was united into a kingdom by Harald Haarfager. Before this time the Northmen (Norwegians, Danes) had become the terror of western Europe. Their incursions into Britain began about 793 and a little later the Frankish dominions were invaded. Ireland as well as Britain was invaded by them. They pillaged Paris repeatedly in the ninth century and about 911 obtained the cession of a part of France, afterwards called Normandy. In 874 they settled in Iceland and a century later the Icelanders began to colonize Greenland. The main-land of America is supposed to have been discovered by Northmen about 1000. From the side of Sweden, too, the Scandinavians advanced on a career of conquest. The Varangians, supposed to have been Northmen, laid the foundations of the Russian empire at Novgorod about 882, and a few years later we find them before the walls of Constantinople. The Christianization of Norway was effected in the course of the tenth and eleventh centuries. In Ireland the Scandinavians suffered a great overthrow at Clontarf in 1014. For a time the Norwegians were in possession of the Orkney and Shetland islands and the Hebrides. Their last invasion of Scotland was repelled in 1263. In 1397 Margaret, queen of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, daughter of Valdemar IV of Denmark effected the union of Kalmar by which the crowns of the three Scandinavian kingdoms were to remain permanently united under one sovereign. In 1523 Sweden again became a separate kingdom, but the union between Denmark and Norway was drawn closer and closer to the disadvantage of the latter, which was reduced to the position of a mere dependency of the former. Denmark was forced to cede Norway to Sweden in Jan., 1814 (treaty of Kiel). The Norwegians resisted this transfer, but their resistance was unavailing in the face of the Swedish arms. Norway did not however become part of the kingdom of Sweden. The two crowns were declared indissolubly united, but each kingdom retained its separate constitution. This union was declared dissolved by Norway in 1905.

Nova Scotia, novâ skô-shî, a province of the Dominion of Canada, lying between 43° 25' and 47° N lat. and between 60° 45' and 66° 25' W lon. It consists of a long, narrow peninsula, called Nova Scotia proper and the island of Cape Breton, which is separated from the main-land by the Gulf of Canada. It is bounded N by Northumberland Strait (which separates it from Prince Edward Island) and by the Gulf of St. Lawrence; NE, E, and S by the Atlantic Ocean; and SW and W by the Bay of Fundy and New Brunswick, with which latter it is connected by an isthmus only 11 miles wide, separating the Bay of Fundy from Northumberland Strait. Area of the land-surface, 30,550 sq. m.

The Cobequid Range (or Hills) of mountains, with subequal lines of heights, runs through the north interior of the province, which nowhere rises above 1200 feet, and on each side of this range are rich, arable lands, where agricultural operations are carried on extensively. From Briar Island, at the extremity of Digby Neck, to Cape Split, a distance of 130 miles along the Bay of Fundy extends a ridge of mural precipices (the North Mountains) in many places from 100 to 600 feet in height, beyond which lies the rich and beautiful valley of the Annapolis.

Nova Scotia is abundantly supplied with capacious harbors, the greater number including Halifax, being on the SE coast between capes Sable and Cansu. There are also excellent harbors on Cape Breton Island and on the N side of the province. The largest lake in Nova Scotia proper is Lake Rossignol, 20 miles in length and among others are Ship Harbor Lake, Grand Lake, discharging its waters northward through the Shubenacadie River into Cobequid Bay and College Lake, in the eastern part of the peninsula. The lakes of Cape Breton are much larger and more important. The great Bras d'Or Lake, more properly an inland sea, is a magnificent expanse of water abounding in fish. Of the rivers of Nova Scotia the most important are the Shubenacadie, the Anns, and the Annapolis, flowing into the Bay of Fundy; the St. Mary, Musquodoboit, LaHave, and Liverpool flowing into the Atlantic. The most remarkable body of water in the province is Minas Basin, the E. arm of the Bay of Fundy, penetrating 44 miles inland and terminating in Cobequid Bay. The tides here rush in with great impetuosity and form what is called the bore. At the equinoxes they have been known to rise from 60 to 70 feet, while in Halifax harbor, on the opposite coast, the spring tides rise only from 6 to 9 feet. The other principal bays are St. George Bay and Chedabucto Bay in the E., connected by the Gulf of Cansu; St. Mary Bay and Townsend Bay in the extreme W. of the peninsula; and Mahone and St. Margaret bays, on the S. coast.

The province of Nova Scotia is rich in geological formations, almost the entire series from the crystalline granites to the Triassic sandstones being here met with. In the isthmus connecting the peninsula with New Brunswick the underlying rocks consist of variously colored sandstones of the coal-measures, containing seams of good bituminous coal, many of which are profitably worked. Coal is extensively mined at three chief localities—Cumberland, Pictou, and in Cape Breton. At the famous Joggins field, on Chigaco Channel, the Carboniferous series is exposed in a thickness of nearly 15,000 feet and shows 26 or more beds of coal in vertical succession. The yield of coal in 1905 was 3,338,638 tons, valued at $5,947,870. Gold has also been extensively mined and its product in 1900 was valued at $607,132. The total production of gold from the Nova Scotia mines from 1863 to 1905 was 662,365 ounces, valued at $11,868,488. Copper, lead, silver and cinnabar are fairly abundant. Iron is an important product, the quantity of ore seems inexhaustible and the quality manufactured is equal to the best. Gypsum is extensively worked near Windsor and in Cape Breton and occurs in masses of great thickness. Beautiful agates, amethysts, chalcedonies, jaspers, carnegomes, and the entire group of scottite minerals abound in the amygdaloidal trap along the Bay of Fundy.

The climate of Nova Scotia is remarkably temperate, considering its northern latitude. The extremes of cold is 29° below zero the extreme of heat, which is rarely attained, is 95°-98°. The summer maximum at Halifax is about 87°. Dense fogs are at certain seasons prevalent along the Atlantic coast. The annual precipitation is about 45 inches. Wheat, rye, oats, barley, buckwheat, Indian corn, potatoes, turnips, mangel wurzel, tomatoes, etc., grow in abundance. Apples, pears, plums, cherries, and other garden fruits attain the utmost perfection. In some sections of the country peaches and grapes ripen in the open air. The apple orchards of Annapolis and Kings cos. are very productive.

The manufactures include coarse cloths, called home-spuns, flannels, bed-linen, blankets, carpets, and tweeds. Tanning is carried on to some extent; and in the towns and villages boots, shoes, saddlery harness, household furniture, agricultural implements, printing and wrapping-paper, carriages, and other articles are manufactured. The iron and steel industries have been developed to some extent and there is considerable sugar-refining. There is an extensive ship-building industry.

The fisheries of Nova Scotia are among the finest in the world. There is no part of its coast where a profitable fishery may not be pursued. Its bays and harbors and inland lakes and rivers teem with salmon cod, halibut, haddock, mackerel, herring, shad, lobsters, etc. The total value of the fish-catch in 1898 was $7,236,035, of which the lobsters amounted to $2,873,625, the cod to $2,866,614, the haddock to $632,648, and the mackerel to $622,694. In 1901 the product was valued at $7,989,548.

There were, in 1900 927 miles of railroad in operation, the lines traversing the full length of the peninsula and crossing Cape Breton.

The public affairs of the province are administered by a lieutenant-governor an executive council a legislative council of 21 members and a legislative assembly of 38 members.

Nova Scotia (exclusive of Cape Breton which see) is divided into 14 counties, as follows: Annapolis, Antigonish, Colchester, Cumberland, Digby, Guysborough, Halifax, Hants, Kings, Lunenburg, Pictou, Queens, Shelburne, and Yarmouth. Total pop. of the province in 1901 459,174.

Halifax is the capital and chief city with a population of 40,832. Other towns are Sydney (Cape Breton) 9909, Yarmouth Pictou, New Glasgow, and Lunenburg. Small towns and villages are scattered over the province, which are accessible from the most remote districts by railway or steamboat or by good carriage-roads.

John Cabot, sailing in the service of Henry VII of England, reached the shores of North America in the vicinity of Nova Scotia in 1497. The first attempt at settlement was made in 1604 by the French, who called the region Acadia, which name covered a large territory outside of Nova Scotia (New Brunswick, etc.). The English claimed this part of America by right of the discovery of Cabot, and in 1621 Sir William Alexander obtained from James I. a grant of Acadia, which the English renamed Nova Scotia. His attempt at colonization proved a failure. The dispute between England and France regarding the possession of Nova Scotia was settled in 1713, when the region was formally relinquished by France. Thousands of the French Acadians were deported by the English in 1755. In 1763 the island of Cape Breton was annexed to Nova Scotia. In 1784 the province of New Brunswick was formed out of a part of its territory. In 1867 Nova Scotia became a member of the Dominion of Canada.

Nubia, no-wa-pa-ter, a region of eastern Africa, forming part of the Egyptian Sudan extending southward from Egypt (about lat. 22° N.) to Omdurman (or to the Egyptian Sudan proper) and thence the Red Sea on the E. to the Desert of Sabara on the W. It is traversed throughout its entire extent by the Nile and is in greater part a desert (barren). The fertile area is situated almost entirely in the valley of the Nile, which is here so narrow as to leave little space for cultivation on its banks, and the productive districts are found in the gorges between the mountains and on the islands. A desert of sand and rocks, with some small fertile oases extends E. from Lower Nubia to the Red Sea. In Upper Nubia the country is more varied. The Nile here receives its last affluent, the Atbara, 200 miles below the junction of the White Nile and Blue Nile, between these rivers are situated the fertile regions of Shendi and Halfa. The climate of Nubia is extremely hot and dry, but on the whole healthy. Agriculture employs most of the population on the banks of the Nile and its tributaries and artificial irrigation is resorted to as in Egypt. Chief products are durrah, barley, cotton, indigo, tobacco, gum, coffee, and dates. Cattle, sheep, and goats are reared by the Arabs of the neighboring desert. Manufactures are limited to articles for domestic use. An extensive transit trade is carried on with the interior of Africa and Egypt and the region is traversed by important caravan routes. Suakin or the Red Sea, is the chief port. The inhabitants of Nubia consist of Hamitic peoples (the best known of which are the Bahrin or Beja) and Arabs. In Egypt the Hamitic Nubians are known as Barbar (Barbers). Remains of ancient edifices occur in many parts of the valley of the Nile. Previous to the conquest of Nubia by Mahomet Ali of Egypt, in 1821, it was governed by a multitude of independent chiefs between 1821 and 1862, which marked the beginning of the Mahdi uprising, it was directly under the dominion of Egypt. Egyptian sovereignty was re-established in 1898. Chief towns are Khartoum Omdurman Wadi-Halfa, Dongola, Berber and Suakin. Most of the principal towns are situated on the Cairo railway.

Nuremberg, an/ren-berg (for Nürnberg alen'bēn, L. Nürnberg) the second city in population of Bavaria, in Middle Franconia, on the river Pegnitz, 95 miles N. of Munich. Lat. of observatory 49° 37' N. lon 11° 4' 30" E.

It has retained in a unique degree its medieval aspect,—its tarred walls, narrow streets, red-roofed gable houses, and beautiful fountains and statues, many of the time when Dürer, Kraft, and Vischer made their birthplace the centre of German art,—rendering it the quaintest city in Germany if not in the whole of Europe. The narrow Pegnitz, traversing Nuremberg from E. to W. and dividing it into two nearly equal parts, constitutes, with its numerous fine bridges, a strikingly picturesque feature of the city. The N. and S. sections of the town the Schmalzstrasse and the Lorenstrasse, taking their names from their principal churches, are still in part surrounded by the medieval walls and a dry moat. Beyond the ancient fortifications lie the suburbs to which the industrial establishments are largely confined. The dominant feature of the architectural landscape is the medieval imperial castle, the Kaiserburg. A castle stood here as early as the first half of the eleventh century. In the second half of the twelfth century the emperor Frederick Barbarossa rebuilt the structure. A relic of the original Burg survives in the tower known as Alt-Nürnberg. The Kaiserburg crowns precipitous rock in the extreme N. of the Schmalzstrasse. It is now a royal residence and houses a rich collection of objects of art. The foremost ecclesiastical edifices of the city are the Lorenzkirche, built in the thirteenth century and restored in the nineteenth with superb stained-glass windows and a splendidly sculptured exterior; the beautiful Gothic Schmalzstrasse, dating from the close of the Middle Ages, with the tomb of the saint by Peter Vischer and a monument by Kraft; the Marienkirche (Frauenkirche) with a fine portal and the churches of St. John and St. Agidius. The most interesting secular edifices are, in addition to the Kaiserburg, the town-hall in Italian Renaissance style with many frescoes and paintings; the Chamber of Commerce many quaint old dwellings, notably the houses of Dürer and Hans Sachs (the cobbler poet of Nuremberg); and Kraft's Stations of the Cross.

Nuremberg is rich in works of sculptural art, chief among them being the Soltau Brunnen a Gothic pyramid of the fourteenth century the statues of Dürer designed by Bausch and the Tugendbrunnen (fountain of virtues). The city is the seat of the National Germanic Museum founded in 1852 and occupying a former Carthusian monastery. It contains splendid collections of Christian and early medieval antiquities, paintings, engravings, stonework, etc., and a library of over 200,000 volumes. Among other notable institutions are the Bavarian Industrial Museum, the natural history museum, the Railway Museum, the old gymnasium, founded by Melancthon, and the municipal library containing about 100,000 volumes. The collection of national archives is of great historical interest. St. John's Cemetery contains many interesting tombs, among them that of Dürer.

Nuremberg has long been noted for its small wares, known in trade as Nuremberg wares, such as toys and small gold, silver and ivory articles, etc., which are sent all over the world. The town holds a high place in the lithographic industry. There are extensive machine-shops and manufactures of lamp-pencils, watches, hardware, optical goods, foundry products, paints, gold-leaf, railway-car, automobiles, electric supplies, etc. The city is an important trade-centre. It is the largest hop-market in the world. The first steam-railway in Germany (that connecting Nuremberg with the neighboring town of Fürth) was opened in 1835. Watches were invented in Nuremberg about the close of the fifteenth century and terrestrial and celestial globes were first manufactured here. Pop. in 1800, 99,519; in 1860, 143,696; in 1900, 261,081 (mostly Protestants).

In the latter part of the Middle Ages Nuremberg rose to the position of one of the most flourishing and powerful city communities of the German Empire. The fifteenth and sixteenth centuries were its golden age in art, learning, and poetry. In 1525 it embraced the Reformation and in 1532 the first religious peace, in which Charles V. was forced to grant terms to the German Protestants was signed here. In 1806 Nuremberg was deprived of its position as a free city and annexed to Bavaria.

Ohio, o'-hi-o, one of the chief effluents of the Mississippi is formed by the Alleghany and Monongahela rivers, which unite at Pittsburgh in Pennsylvania, forming a navigable stream about 600 yards wide. This point is about 730 feet above sea-level. The Ohio flows first northward to Beaver and then generally southwestward to the mouth of the Big Sandy River on the borders of West Virginia and Kentucky forming throughout the greater portion of this course the boundary line between West Virginia and Ohio. It next forms the boundary between Kentucky and Ohio and pursues a west-northwestward course to Cincinnati. After reaching the E. border of Indiana it runs nearly southwestward with a very sinuous course, and forms the boundary between Indiana and Illinois on the right and Kentucky on the left, until it enters the Mississippi at Cairo, at an elevation of about 300 feet above sea-level. In lat. 37° N. The Ohio is nearly 1000 miles long and the area drained by it is computed to be 210,000 sq. m. This river is remarkable for the gentleness and uniformity of its current. Large steamboats can navigate it from Pittsburgh to its mouth except in the low stages of water—i. e., in summer—and when it is closed by ice in winter. The Ohio receives on the right the Muskingum, Scioto, Miami, and Wabash rivers and on the left the Great Kanawha, Big Sandy, Licking, Kentucky, Green, Cumberland, and Tennessee rivers. The last two are the largest affluents. The chief towns on its banks (in descending order) are Pittsburgh, Wheeling, Marietta, Portsmouth, Newport, Cincinnati, Covington (directly opposite Cincinnati), Madison, Louisville, New Albany, Evansville, and Paducah. In the upper part of its course the river flows among verdant hills and beautiful scenery. Near Louisville the navigation was formerly obstructed by rocky rapids, where the river descends 24 feet in a distance of 3 miles. To obviate this difficulty a canal wide and deep enough for steamboats has been opened. The water of this river is subject to great variations of level and the difference between high and low water is 50 ft. or more. The width of the river varies from 500 yards or less to 1400 yards. It encloses a large number of islands. Between Pittsburg and Portsmouth it flows for about 350 miles through the great coal-fields of Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia.

Ohio, a north-central state of the American Union bounded N. by the state of Michigan and Lake Erie, E. by Pennsylvania and West Virginia, S. by West Virginia and Kentucky and W. by Indiana. The boundary on the side of Michigan is the parallel of 41° 42' N. lat. A number of small islands in the SW part of Lake Erie belong to Ohio. Along Lake Erie the state has a water-front of 250 miles, while the navigable Ohio River which separates it from West Virginia and Kentucky washes the SE and S borders of the state for 450 miles. Area of the land-surface, 40,760 sq. m. of the superincumbent waters, 300 sq. m.

The face of the country may be described as a low lying table-land whose water-shed has an average altitude of about 1100 feet. The highest point (Bellefontaine, 1540 ft.) is in Logan co. in the west-central part of the state. The north-west slope reaches Lake Erie (elevation, 573 ft.) by easy grades of descent, the surface being generally level or gently rolling, while the southern and southeastern aspects have a somewhat greater pitch. The Ohio at the SW angle of the state being only 435 ft. and at its highest point on the eastern border about 865 ft. above the sea. The Ohio thus falls some 330 ft. in 450 miles and this river and many of its tributaries have cut for themselves deep trough-like valleys. The banks of the Ohio have, therefore, a remarkably bold aspect, and portions of its immediate valleys are occupied by steep cliffs. A part of the southeastern or coal region is cut deeply into a labyrinth of narrow ravines. In the NW is a fairly well-wooded area, naturally swampy but a large part of the state falls within the area formerly designated prairie. A striking physiographic feature of the state is the divide, or line of elevation, taking a NE-SW course, which defines the drainage areas or slopes of the N and the S.

Rivers etc.—The Little Bear, Mahoning, Muskingum, Hooking, Scioto and Little and Great Miami are tributaries of the Ohio, and the Maumee, Portage, Sandusky, Huron, Vermilion, Black, Rocky, Cuyahoga, Chagria Grand and Ashtabula rivers flow into Lake Erie. The latter have in several instances been so improved that their mouths afford harbor facilities. The state has several hundreds of miles of canal navigation and the streams afford much water power.

Mineral Resources.—The keystone of the geological system of Ohio is the Cincinnati limestone, the geologically oldest rock exposed in the state. It is of Lower Silurian age and underlies the blue-grass country of Kentucky. The Silurian and Devonian deposits in the W. and the Carboniferous in the centre and E. occupy nearly the whole of the state, the surface of which is extensively covered with glacial gravels and other forms of glacial drift. The mineral resources of Ohio are mainly represented by her vast deposits of coal (most largely produced in the co. of Jackson, Hooking, Athens, Perry, Guernsey, Belmont, and Stark) the beds of iron-ore (spathe and other forms) associated with the coal deposits, and the abundant supply of petroleum. They comprise also salt (obtained from springs) building sandstones (Massillon, Dayton) grindstones (Berea, Amherst, etc.), marble, gypsum (Sandusky), brick and pottery-clays (Mineral Point) etc. The production of coal in 1903 was 24,838,103 short tons valued at $31,932,327 of iron-ore, 29,688 tons (all carbonates) of petroleum, 20,456 barrels valued at $24,224,021. The output of clay products was valued at $35,208,128 giving the state first position in this production. The state is rich in natural gas and in 1903 stood fourth in rank as a producer.

Agriculture.—In nearly every branch of agricultural industry Ohio occupies a leading position. Excepting the steep bluff sides there is very little barren land and the only unproductive soils are certain shallow argillaceous outcrops of the upper and middle coal measures. The 'Western Reserve,' in the NE is a famous dairy and stock-growing region. The dairy products, including the butter and cheese made on the farms, as well as the output obtained from milk sent to the factories, is very large. Ohio's wool-crop is one of the largest in the United States, the SE. section being especially adapted to this product. The washed and unwashed wool obtained in 1909 was 15,638,569 pounds. The Miami, Scioto, and Muskingum river bottoms, largely watered by the self-fertilizing soil derived from the highly fossiliferous Cincinnati limestone, are splendidly adapted to the production of Indian corn. The Muskingum and Maumee valleys are famous wheat-growing sections. The steep river-fronts on the southern border and the shores and islands of Lake Erie produce much wine, which ranks with the best American vintages. The Western Reserve and the Miami Valley are noted for their apples, while the entire Lake region is particularly adapted to the growth of fruit. Ohio is one of the leading states in the cultivation of potatoes. Tobacco is an important crop. Many of the best lands in the state were called 'barrens' by the early settlers and were supposed to be too dry to have much value. The chief agricultural crops in 1900 were wheat, 8,523,870 bushels, corn 166,999,186 bushels, oats, 40,840,534 bushels, barley 622,066 bushels, rye, 513,023 bushels, buckwheat, 147,632 bushels, potatoes, 12,561,584 bushels, and hay 1,652,797 tons.

Manufactures.—Having abundant water-power, coal, iron ore, wool, timber and other raw materials, it was inevitable that Ohio should become a great manufacturing state. In the iron- and steel-industry Ohio holds the second place in the Union. For the iron product the state has employed not only her own excellent spathe ores, but has drawn largely upon the vast deposits about Lake Superior for her own block and coking coals having special fitness for the iron-industry. Cleveland, Youngstown, Massillon, Lorain and the Ohio River towns are principal seats of the iron and steel manufacture, which embraces castings rolled and forged work. Bessemer steel sheet-iron work, wire and wire goods, nails, pipe, bridge-work, rail, general machinery and foundry products, etc. Other important industries are pork-packing, oil-refining, the extraction of linseed and hard oil, the production of flour and grist mill products, factory-chimney, beer, malt, whiskey, wine and brandy, the sawing of lumber and the manufacture of boxes, cars, carriages, farming implements, clothing, furniture, leather boots, shoes, harness, cement, lime, fire-brick, pottery, paints, salt, porcelain, brick, glass (including plate and stained glass), chemicals, food preparations, soap, candles and paper. The quantity of pig iron manufactured in 1900 was 2,470,011 long tons of wire-rope (in 1900) 1,053,646 kegs of Bessemer steel (ingots) 1,879,237 long tons. Cleveland ranks among the leading ship-building places of the world. The number of tobacco-manufacturers in 1899 was 2324 whose product was 604,091,171 cigars, 9,730,409 pounds of plug tobacco and 8,627,672 pounds of other forms of tobacco. The Hookwood pottery made at Cincinnati is famous. The value of the products of the leading industries in 1900 were iron and steel $128,935,356 foundry and machine-shop products, $72,399,632, scouring- and grist mill products $37,390,361, liquors $31,711,001, slaughtering, $20,850,780, lumber and timber products $20,169,654, boots and shoes $11,970,854, men's clothing $11,603,824, tobacco, $20,632,629, agriculture's implements, $13,975,368.

The fisheries of Lake Erie are important. Many million pounds of fresh lake fish are annually sold in the Lake markets at first hand. The river Maumee is one of the most prolific fish-producing streams in the United States. The manufacture of caviare and smoked sturgeon has become an important industry.

Commerce. is greatly facilitated by the extent of the lake- and river fronts of Ohio. With the variety of natural and manufactured products Ohio has an extensive commerce, but from her geographical position it is mainly inter-state and domestic in character. Many sailing vessels and steamers owned in the state are engaged in lake and river traffic. Toledo, Sandusky and Cleveland on Lake Erie, are ports of entry. Cincinnati is a subport of entry and Fairport and Columbus are ports of delivery. The principal canals of the state are the Ohio Canal, uniting Cleveland and Portsmouth, the Miami and Erie, uniting Cincinnati and Toledo, the Hooking, uniting Carroll with Nelsonville, and the Walhonding, uniting Rochester with Buccon.

Railroads.—The first railroad (the Mad River R.) was begun in 1835. In 1841 there were 36 miles in operation. In 1846 129 miles, in 1850 975 miles, in 1860 2946 miles, in 1870 5538 miles, in 1880 5703 miles, in 1890 7988 miles without counting sidings and extra tracks, and in 1900 8928 miles.

The counties are 88 in number,—viz. Adams, Allen, Ashland, Ashtabula, Athens, Auglaize, Belmont, Brown, Butler, Carroll, Champaign, Clark, Clermont, Clinton, Columbiana, Coshocton, Crawford, Cuyahoga, Darke, Deane, Delaware, Erie, Fairfield, Fayette, Franklin, Fulton, Gallia, Geauga, Greene, Guernsey, Hamilton, Hancock, Hardin, Harrison, Henry, Highland, Hooking, Holmes, Huron, Jackson, Jefferson, Knox, Lake, Lawrence, Licking, Logan, Lorain, Lucas, Madison, Mahoning, Marion, Medina, Meigs, Mercer, Miami, Monroe, Montgomery, Morgan, Morrow, Muskingum, Noble, Ottawa, Paulding, Perry, Pinkney, Pike, Portage, Preble, Putnam, Richland, Ross, Sandusky, Scioto, Seneca, Shelby, Stark, Summit, Trumbull, Tuscarawas, Union, Van Wert, Vinton, Warren, Washington, Wayne, Williams, Wood, Wyandot.

Cities and Towns.—The principal cities and towns are Cleveland (pop. in 1900 381,768) Cincinnati (345,903), Toledo (123,823) Columbus the capital (129,540) Dayton (85,823), Youngstown (44,884) Akron (43,728) Springfield (36,263), Canton (30,687) Zanesville (22,638) Sandusky (19,684), etc.

Government, etc.—The governor and most of the state officers are chosen for a term of 2 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives, the members of both houses being elected for 2 years. The state sends 21 representatives to the lower house of Congress.

Education.—A liberal and effective system of public instruction prevails in Ohio. The seats of the principal colleges and academic institutions are Akron (Banhiet College) Athens (Ohio University) Berea, Cincinnati (University of Cincinnati Hebrew Union College, etc.) Cleveland (Adelbert College, Cleveland Medical College, and College for Women of Western Reserve University the Case School of Applied Science, etc.) Columbus, Delaware (Ohio Wesleyan University) Gambier (Kenyon College) Glendale, Granville (Denison University, etc.), Hiram (Hiram College) Marietta (Marietta College) New Athens New Concord, Oberlin (Oberlin College) Oxford (Miami University) Richmond Rio Grande, Saco, Springfield, Uxian Toledo Urbana, Westerville Wilmington Wooster (University of Wooster) and Yellow Springs (Antioch College). The state university is located at Columbus. There are numerous normal schools and colleges and independent schools of medicine theology sciences, etc.

Population.—Northern Ohio was principally settled by immigrants from New England and New York, and the central and southern parts by natives of New Jersey Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia. History.—The possession of the region to the Y and W of the Ohio River was a subject of dispute between the British and French until at the close of the French and Indian War in 1763 France relinquished it to England. By the treaty of Paris in 1763 it passed into the possession of the United States. Virginia and Connecticut claimed portions of what is now Ohio but they were induced to relinquish their claims to jurisdiction. In 1797 the region became a part of the Northwest Territory. In 1788 a party of New Englanders, under the auspices of the Ohio Company settled at Marietta, the oldest town in the state. The beginning of the settlement of Cincinnati dates back to the same year. The Indian wars were signified by the defeat of Harnier (1790) and St. Clair (1791) and the great victory of Wayne at Fallen Timbers on the Maumee (1794) which established tranquillity. The extensive tract known as the Western Reserve, in the NE corner of the present state, the proprietorship in whose soil was vested in the state of Connecticut, attracted many settlers from New England. In 1803 the state entered the Union. Lake Erie was the scene of important naval operations in the war of 1812 witnessing Perry's victory in Sept., 1813. The completion of the Erie Canal in 1825 first established easy communication between Ohio and the Atlantic seaboard. Ohio has given three presidents to the United States,—Hayes, Garfield, and McKinley.

Oklahoma, ok'la-ho'mah a territory of the United States, bounded N by Kansas and Colorado, E by Indian Territory S by Indian Territory and Texas, and W by Texas and New Mexico. The territory comprises what once formed the western part of Indian Territory together with the narrow strip N of the Texas Panhandle. This latter section formerly known as the Public Land Strip (or 'No Man's Land') was ceded to the United States by Texas in 1846, but in fixing the boundaries during the territorial legislation which followed this strip was left out, and for forty years was without a name and without law though it was often erroneously represented on the maps as forming a part of Indian Territory. The northern boundary of the territory is the parallel of 37° N lat. The area of the land surface of Oklahoma is 38,830 sq m. of the appertaining waters, 200 sq m.

Surface.—Oklahoma is generally a rolling plain of 900-2500 feet elevation, rising to the W where it forms part of the Great Plains. The narrow strip lying N of Texas is in greater part an arid plateau region, which to the dry summer season is often covered with saline efflorescence. The river valleys are fertile and the land is generally well adapted to stock-raising. The highest land is in the extreme NW where an elevation of nearly 5000 feet seems to be reached. On the rolling plains there are few trees and the streams have in many cases cut deep canyons below the general level. In the S, between the Canadian and Red rivers (the latter forming the southern boundary line with Texas) are the Wichita Mountains of considerable elevation. They are continuous with the hills in Indian Territory and constitute a part of connecting link between the Ozark Mountains of Arkansas and Missouri and the Rocky Mountains. The central part of the territory is occupied by the Cheateauque Mountains.

Rivers.—The important streams are the Arkansas with the Cimarron Canadian and other branches, in the northern and central portions, and the Red River with its affluents, which drain the southern section. Many of these streams are nearly or wholly waterless in summer.

Climate, Minerals.—The climate is mild and generally healthful though in the SW there are tracts of marshy land where fevers are not uncommon. The summers are hot, sometimes exceptionally so, with the mercury rising to 115°-118° and the winters, although usually not rigorous, also show extremes of cold (—20° or even —35°). The rainfall is moderate, averaging annually about 31 inches, but rising in some places to nearly 40 inches. There is a liability to droughts and the country is subject to dust, high winds, and "norther" (or cold wind-storms from the north), which develop rapidly and often prevail for a day or two at a time. Much of the water is alkaline or salty and unfit for drinking. In the W and NW there are extensive deposits of gypsum and salt and there is much good building stone. Good coal is found in Pawnee co. and in the Osage Reservation and there are indications of a fair amount of mineral wealth in the tract included in the Comanche Reservation. Gold silver copper petroleum, and natural gas have been obtained in minor quantities.

Agriculture.—Much of the land is well suited for agriculture, and favorable results have been obtained from the cultivation of the cereals. The leading crops in 1900 were wheat, 18,667,873 bushels corn, 14,144,662 bushels. Considerable fruit, especially the peach, is grown. Stock raising, particularly in the western section, has developed into an important industry. The amount of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1900 was 218,010 pounds.

Education.—School laws were enacted at the first meeting of the legislature. A territorial university has been established at Norman normal schools at Alva and Edmond, and an agricultural and mechanical college at Stillwater. There are also the Eppworth University at Oklahoma (city) Langston University for colored, at Langston, and Chilocco Industrial School for Indians, in Kay co.

Political Divisions and Population.—At the time of organization the territory contained seven counties. This number was later increased and the new counties were designated by letters but they now all bear names. There were, in 1900 23 counties.—viz. Beaver Blaine, Canadian, Cleveland, Custer, Day, Dewey Garfield, Grant, Greer, (formerly claimed by Texas) Kay, Kingfisher Lincoln Logan, Noble, Oklahoma, Pawnee Payne, Pottawatomie, Roger Mills, Washita, Woods, and Woodward, with several Indian reservations. Comanche and Kiowa counties have been organized since the official census. Pop. in 1900 91,634, in 1900 368,231. The number of Indians on the reservations (Kaws, Kiowas, Comanches, Osages and Wichitas) in 1900 was 13,873. The chief towns are Oklahoma (pop. 10,037) Guthrie (10,066) Shawnee (3482) El Reno, Perry Stillwater Kingfisher Blackwell, and Norman. The population of most of the towns has very greatly increased since the official census. The length of operating lines of railway in 1900 was 899. The capital is Oklahoma.

History.—Oklahoma, an Indian word for beautiful land, was the name given to the western part of Indian Territory ceded by the Indians to the United States in 1866. The treaties under which these lands were released stipulated that they were to be used by the government for the settlement of other Indian tribes or freedmen, but were not to be open to whites. From time to time after this cession, various tribes were located in different parts of this region, but much of the land remained unoccupied and before very long speculators and adventurers in the surrounding states were stimulated with a desire to possess it. Under the guidance of energetic leaders parties of so-called boomers entered the territory with the intention of securing homes, and the military force of the United States had finally to be employed against them. In 1885 Congress authorized the president to open negotiations with the Creeks, Seminoles, and Chickasaws for the purpose of opening the unassigned lands to settlement by the whites. Early in 1889 arrangements were concluded with the Creeks and Seminoles, by which, in consideration of the payment by the government of several million dollars, the clause forbidding settlement by white citizens on the lands ceded by them in 1866 was cancelled. The area which thus became the absolute property of the government amounted to 3,440,000 acres. The lands were thrown open for settlement on April 22, 1889, when a mad rush was made to take possession of them. The creation of a new district with a population of 50,000 persons, in a single day was a novelty even in the history of the rapid development of the West. Oklahoma Territory was organized in 1890. While Oklahoma was subject to the invasions of the boomers, settlers had gradually taken up their abode in No Man's Land. When Oklahoma was formed this section was made one of the counties of the new territory. In 1891 the land acquired from the Sacs and Foxes, the Iowas, and Pottawatomies was thrown open for settlement. The Chickasaws did not accept the terms offered by the government until 1893, when the United States acquired the ownership of 6,000,000 acres, constituting the famous Cherokee Outlet. The scenes which were characteristic of the first rush for the new land were re-enacted when this long coveted Cherokee Strip was thrown open to the throngs waiting along its borders.

Area, 2479 sq. m. Pop. in 1887 315,095. In 1890 354,988. In 1900 399,183.

The duchy of Oldenburg belongs to the basin of the North Sea and is level. The northern portion known as the Marsh (Ger. Marsch) is largely protected against inundation by dikes. Almost the whole of the Marsh is utilized for agriculture and pasture. The bulk of the duchy known as the Geest, consists of infertile land, much of it being moorland and heath. The chief rivers are the Weser the left bank of which belongs to Oldenburg from Bremen to the sea, the Hunte, an affluent of the Weser and the Haase, an affluent of the Ems. The climate of Oldenburg resembles that of the Netherlands, being temperate and humid. The agricultural holdings are in the main very small. The leading crops include cereals, hay, potatoes, and beans. Cattle, swine, sheep and poultry are extensively reared. Bee-keeping is a considerable industry. In the manufacturing industry Oldenburg holds a very inferior position. The constitution of Oldenburg provides for a single representative chamber, the Landtag, whose members are chosen by indirect election. The principalities of Lübeck and Birkenfeld have their own provincial councils. The grand-duchy has 1 vote in the German Bundestag and sends 3 members to the Reichstag. The capital is Oldenburg. The bulk of the inhabitants are Protestants. There are numerous descendants of the old Frisians. The history of Oldenburg as a state under that name reaches back to about the beginning of the twelfth century when it first appears as a petty countship. In 1448 Christian count of Oldenburg, succeeded the throne of Denmark. The country was under Danish rule from 1667 to 1773 when it passed under the rule of the house of Holstein-Gottorp. In 1777 the state was erected from a county into a duchy. In 1815 it was raised to the rank of a grand-duchy.

Ontario, on-tā re-o, the smallest and most easterly of the five great lakes of the United States and Canada, forms part of the boundary between New York and Ontario. It is 195 miles long on a line drawn nearly east and west, and about 65 miles wide at the broadest part. Area, 7250 sq. m. The greatest depth is 738 feet, with the surface 247 ft. above sea-level. It is connected with Lake Erie, which lies 225 ft. higher by the Niagara River which enters Lake Ontario about 40 miles from its W. extremity. Vessels pass from one of these lakes to the other by the Welland Canal (leaving Lake Ontario at Port Dalhousie) which is in Canada and is 27 miles long. Lake Ontario is never closed by ice, and the water freezes only near the shore where it is shallow. Its outlet is the St. Lawrence River which issues from the NE. end of the lake. The shores are generally low and there are few peninsulas or promontories. An cient beaches mark former higher levels of the water. The chief towns on the shores of the lake are Oswego, Hamilton, Toronto, Whitby, Port Hope, and Kingston. The largest rivers that enter it besides the Niagara are the Genesee, Oswego, and Black rivers. It contains an abundance of fish. Lake Ontario was named Lake St. Louis by Champlain, and for a time it was known as Lake Frontenac.

Ontario, formerly Upper Canada, or Canada West, a province of the Dominion of Canada, bounded on the NE. and E. by the province of Quebec, SE. by New York on the W. and NW. by Manitoba and Keweenaw, and on the S. by the Great Lakes (and their connecting waters) and Minnesota. Its most northerly part extends to James Bay (Hudson Bay). Area of the land-surface, 318 650 sq. m.

The surface of the country is diversified by rivers and lakes, a main water-shed separating the waters of the Ottawa from those of the St. Lawrence and a minor one dividing the streams flowing into Lake Simcoe and Lake Huron from those flowing into lakes Erie and Ontario.

There are few marked prominences, and seemingly no portion of the province rises above 2000 feet. In general the surface lies below 1200 feet and continues the Laurentian Highland, with its partially bare and glaciated rocks and extensive deposits of till (or drift). In the Ontario peninsula between Lake Huron on the NW. and lakes Ontario and Erie on the SE. is the most fertile and thickly populated portion of the province and of the entire dominion.

The principal rivers of Ontario are the St. Lawrence, the tributaries of the Ottawa, the French Magalloway, Severn and Nottawasaga, falling into Georgian Bay, the Saguenay, Mattawan, and Aux Sables, falling into the main body of Lake Huron; the Thames, running SW. into Lake St. Clair; the Grand, flowing SE. into Lake Erie; the Trent, in part of its course called the Otonabee and the Mohawk, flowing SE. into the Bay of Quinte and the Niagara, falling into Lake Ontario. The Ottawa forms part of its NE. boundary. In the NW. Algoma district the rivers include the Abitibi and Albany (both tributary to Hudson Bay) and the English. The lakes of Ontario are numerous the aggregate area of the waters belonging to the province, not counting the larger lakes which receive its waters (Superior, Huron, Erie, and Ontario) is estimated at 3350 sq. m. Among the minor lakes are Nipigon, Simcoe, and Nipissing. The Lake of the Woods is in the extreme northwest. The principal bays are the Georgian, Nottawasaga, Owen Sound, Long Point, Burlington, and Quinte.

The climate of Ontario is not one of very great extremes in its more southerly parts, and the influence of the Great Lakes is by no means insignificant. At Toronto the lowest temperature is about -8° , the maximum, 89° . The annual rainfall over the province ranges from about 36 to 44 inches. The flora is in the northern parts largely of a sub-Arctic type, but in the peninsular region of the E. the vegetation is that of the belt of deciduous trees of Ohio and New York. Less than one-half of the great forests of spruce, pine, and hemlock which at one time covered the province now remains. Northern Ontario is still important as a fur-yielding country and supplies quantities of the pelts of the otter, mink and skunk. The moose, caribou, wolf, fox and bear are a part of the mammalian fauna.

The agricultural resources of the country are very great. Immense crops of wheat are raised, also oats, barley, Indian corn, rye, potatoes, turnips, etc. The apple-orchards of the southwestern counties are very productive, and pear, plum, grapes, cherries and various kinds of berries thrive. The chief agricultural crops in 1900 were wheat, 31,816,000 bushels; oats, 89,893,327 bushels; and barley, 16,000,701 bushels.

The mineral wealth of the country is very rich and varied, and comprises iron, copper, silver, lead, gold, nickel, plumbago, antimony, arsenic, manganese, petroleum, and rock-salt. The production of gold in 1900 was $421,000 of silver in 1900 105,487 ounces, nickel (from the Sudbury region, one of the most productive in the world) in 1901 0 139 000 pounds, valued at $4,564,000, and pig-iron in 1900 64,749 net tons, valued at $683,157. The production of copper which is very abundant in the shore-regions of Lakes Superior and Huron, reached in 1900 upward of 8 000 000 pounds. Ontario furnishes the greater part of the petroleum produced in the Dominion, and the product has been in some years as high as 36 000 000 gallons.

The principal articles manufactured are cloth, hats for men, sawn timber, iron and hardware, paper, soap, starch, hats, caps, boots, shoes, leather, cotton and woolen goods, steam engines and locomotives, sewing machines, woodenware of all descriptions, agricultural implements, wagons and carriages, etc. The railway system has made rapid strides in Ontario. In 1852 there was not a single mile in operation in the province; in 1900 the mileage was 6812. The principal canals are the Welland between Lakes Erie and Ontario, to avoid the Niagara Falls; the Rideau between Kingston and Ottawa; and the St. Lawrence canal, rendered necessary by the rapids of that river.

The public affairs of the province are administered by a lieutenant-governor, an executive council and a legislative assembly of 93 members.

Ontario is divided into numerous counties and a number of sections which are specifically designated districts. The names of the districts are Algoma, Muskoka, Huron, Parry Sound, and Rainy River. Pop. in 1901 2,182,047. Parry is the most populous province in the Dominion. The principal cities are Toronto (the capital with a population in 1901 of 268,640), Ottawa (the capital of the Dominion, with a population of 50,028), Hamilton, London and Kingston. The leading educational institutions are the University of Toronto, Victoria University (federated with the preceding), Wytheville and St. Michael's Colleges (affiliated with the University of Toronto) and the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph.

The province contains many objects of interest to the tourist among which are the Thousand Islands of the St. Lawrence, the Great Lakes, the Falls of Niagara, and the Falls of Kakabikwa, on the river Kaministiquia, 30 miles from its outlet into Lake Superior.

In 1867 under the Act of Confederation, Upper Canada was constituted the province of Ontario. See CANADA.

Oregon, or-a-gon, one of the Pacific states of the American Union, bounded N by Washington, E by Idaho S by Nevada and California, and W by the Pacific Ocean. The northern border is washed by the Columbia River except to the eastward of the point where that stream first reaches lat. 45° N, which parallel completes the northern limit of the state on the E the Snake River forms a portion of the boundary while the southern limit is lat. 42° N Area of the land-surface, 94,569 sq. m. of the upsurprising waters, 1470 sq. m.

Face of the Country—The coastal strip of Oregon is mountainous and broken, terminating in bold sea-cliffs and passing interiorly into a partial plateau which is densely timbered, except in the S where the bald hills rise in an open prairie-like region with groves of timber. This tract is bounded eastward by the Coast and Umpqua ranges. Between these ranges on the W and the great Cascade Range on the E lie the fertile Willamette Valley and the upper basins of the Umpqua and Rogue rivers—the three river-basins being separated by the transverse Calapooya and Rogue River mountains. The W flank of the Cascade Range is a densely timbered and greatly broken region of which only the valleys are arable. These mountains present many cones of but recently extinct volcanoes. Mount Hood, the loftiest of these situated about 45 miles SE. of Portland, attains an elevation of 11,235 feet. Other lofty summits are Pitt, 9760 ft. Diamond Peak 8667 ft. and Scott, 7123 ft. E of the Cascade Range the country embracing two-thirds of the state, is open, dry, and admirably adapted to pastoral pursuits. It is a rolling country in some parts traversed by deep cañons and elsewhere by mountain-ranges and ridges of volcanic rock. Is the NE is the beautiful Grande Ronde, a valley with 375,000 acres of fertile land, surrounded by well timbered mountains. This is the northernmost of a series of similar valleys enclosed by the Blue Mountains and their eastern spurs. There are also great sage-plains and large marshes occur in the Klamath Valley and elsewhere.

The coast-line extends more than 300 miles N and S. On it are Tillamook, Fales Tillamook, Yaquina and Coos bays, besides which the mouths of the Columbia, Umpqua, Coquille and Rogue rivers afford harbor facilities.

Rivers.—The principal rivers are the Columbia, which borders the state for 300 miles and affords extensive steam navigation, and its tributaries, direct and indirect,—the Willamette, Calapooya, Santiam, Clackamas, Yamhill, Tualatin etc. all west of the Cascade Range, affording some steam navigation and E of the Cascade Range the Des Chutes, John Day, Umatilla, Wells, Walla, and Snake, the last receiving the Grande Ronde, lower Burnt, Malheur and Owyhee. A considerable area in this state sends no water to the sea, since it lies in the Great Basin. Here are Malheur, Harney, Christmas, Abert, Goose, and Summer lakes, and westward are several lakes (the Klamath Lakes) which lie in the Upper Klamath Valley.

Geology. Miscellaneous.—The Cascade Range, geographically continuous with the Sierra Nevada of California, is almost everywhere overlaid with volcanic rocks. In the valleys of the Snake and Owyhee the formation is also largely volcanic, and indeed, nearly the whole eastern section of the state may be said to be a vast volcanic plateau. The western valleys are chiefly of Tertiary and Quaternary age, but there are well-characterized Cretaceous areas, mainly in the Des Chutes, John Day and Rogue River valleys. The ridge between Coos Bay and the Coquille River contains valuable lignitic coal of Cretaceous or Tertiary age and outcrops of the same mineral occur at many other points. The amount of coal mined in the state in 1903 was 91,144 short tons valued at $221,933. Gold is found both E and W of the Cascade Range, occurring in quartz and placer deposits argentiferous galeas and native silver occur at various points. Ores of copper and iron are very abundant and have a wide range. The output of gold for the year 1903 was 63,411 fine ounces, valued at $1,412,268 of silver 118,090 fine ounces, valued at $65,720. Pottery, a clay glass-cand, granite, marble, sandstones, slate, steatite and other mineral substances of economic value are plentiful.

Climate.—The climate of western Oregon is much like that of England but milder in winter except in elevated places. The rainfall is abundant and in many places excessive, ranging as high as 100 and even 140 inches per year. E. of the Cascade Mountains the rainfall is markedly deficient, falling to 12 or even 6 inches and the climate is generally pleasant, although with extremes of summer (100°-110°) and winter (—25°) temperatures. Live-stock seldom needs winter foddering or careful shelter, although the last is desirable in the rainy season.

Fauna and Flora.—The animals differ widely from those of the Atlantic states but the grizzly and the black bear, the deer, prong-horn, big horn, Rocky Mountain goat, coyote, panther etc. as representatives of the more familiar forms of the mammalian fauna, represent species found widely dispersed on the continent. Salmon and trout are common in the streams, and the annual catch of the former is very large and lucrative, especially on the Columbia River. Other fishes of economic importance are several herrings and smelts, the halibut, and the ood (incorrectly so called). There is much and widely varied furred and feathered game.

The principal mountain-ranges and nearly all the western valleys and plateaus are densely wooded with giant trees. Here grow several species of pine, cedar, and fir, the cypress, redwood, larch, spruce, juniper, yew, chestnut, maple, oak, ash, and alder and eastward there are willows, poplars, birches, and some coniferous trees. Coniferous trees predominate and give tone to the landscape. The cutting and sawing of lumber and the export of timber and spars afford employment to much capital and the Douglas spruce for makes the best masts and spars in the world. The quantity of lumber cut in 1899 was 966,860,000 feet, valued at $6,238,260. Among native fruits are the currant, gooseberry, blackberry, raspberry, strawberry and grape. The various bunch grasses and the white sage of the E. afford excellent pasturage.

Objects of Interest to Tourists.—The scenery on the lower Columbia is everywhere of a grand though gloomy character. The Dalles and the Cascades, the Falls of the Willamette and of Silver Creek, the great cone of Mount Hood, the mountain cliffs and gorges, the cañons and the snow-capped peaks, the numerous limpid lakes and thermal salt and mineral springs, broken lava-deserts and beautiful pastoral valleys, are among the infinite variety of interesting objects to be found in this state.

Agriculture.—Western Oregon is specially adapted to wool-growing, cattle-breeding and the growth of the best grades of winter wheat, barley and oats. Hay is produced abundantly. Indian corn does not thrive, the summers being too cool. The state ranks second in the production of hops, chiefly grown in the Willamette Valley and in the quality of its temperate fruits holds a leading position. The main fruit-growing region is the area between the Coast and Cascade ranges. The number of apple-trees in the state in 1900 was 2,825,898 plum- and prune-trees, 2,517,523. Peaches and figs grow in the southwest. The eastern valleys and plains are better adapted to grazing than in agriculture; but many tracts of excellent wheat-land are found there. In the Willamette Valley live-stock of every kind attains great perfection. Flax is cultivated for fibre and seed and does admirably. The chief agricultural crops in 1900 were wheat, 10,198,012 bushels, oats 5,252,770 bushels, barley 905,928 bushels, corn, 51,147 bushels, rye 54,049 bushels, potatoes, 1,992,029 bushels and hay, 1,877,085 tons. The quantity of washed and unwashed wool obtained from the wool-clip of 1900 was 18,810,192 pounds.

Manufactures.—The principal industries entering under this head are lumber-sawing, the tanning of leather, the making of boots, shoes, harness, and saddlery, the milling and reduction of ores, and the making of flour, furniture, liquors, wagons, cotton-seed and hauled oils, etc. The packing of beef and pork is an industry of some importance, far surpassed, however by that of the fishing and canning of salmon, the product of which has an annual value of about $2,000,000. There is also some ship-building.

Railroads.—In 1863 there were 4 miles of railroad in operation in 18 0 159 miles in 1880 608 miles in 1890, 1455 miles and in 1900 1695 miles.

The counties are 33 in number—viz. Baker, Benton, Clackamas, Clatsop, Columbia, Coos, Crook, Curry, Douglas, Gilliam, Grant, Harney, Jackson, Josephine, Klamath, Lake, Lane, Lincoln, Linn, Malheur, Marion, Morrow, Multnomah, Polk, Sherman, Tillamook, Tualatin, Union, Wallowa, Wasco, Washington, Wheeler, and Yamhill. The principal towns are Portland, on the Willamette (pop. in 1900 90,426), Astoria (5381), Baker City a mining supply centre (5643), Pendleton (4406), Salem, the capital (4258), The Dalles (3542), Oregon City (3494) etc.

Education.—Eugene is the seat of the University of Oregon. Among other colleges are the Pacific University at Forest Grove (Congregational), McMinnville College (Baptist), Philomath College (United Brethren in Christ) at Philomath, Willamette University (Methodist) at Salem, Portland University at University Park, Portland Academy and St. Michael's College (Roman Catholic) at Portland. The state agricultural college is at Corvallis and there are state normal schools at Ashland, Drain, Monmouth, Gold Beach and Weston.

Government, etc.—The governor and state officers are elected for a term of 4 years. The legislature consists of a senate and a house of representatives, the members of the former being elected for a term of 4 years and those of the latter for 2 years. The state has 2 representatives in the lower house of the national Congress.

Population.—Pop. in 1850, 13,294; in 1860 52,465; in 1870 10,925; in 1880, 174,708; in 1890 313,767; and in 1900 413,636. About one-sixth of the inhabitants in 1900 were foreign born, including over 10,000 Chinese. There are several thousand Indians belonging to main tribes.

History.—The possession of the country to the N of the Columbia River was disputed previous to 1846 by the United States and Great Britain. The claim of the United States to Oregon (and also Washington) was based upon the discovery of Captain Gray who had visited these regions towards the close of the eighteenth century (having been despatched by Boston merchants in quest of furs) and upon the Louisiana purchase (the Spaniards, the possessors of Louisiana from 1763 to 1803, having made explorations along these coasts). In 1846 the United States and Great Britain agreed upon the parallel of 49° N as the boundary between their dominions in this quarter. In 1811 Astoria was founded by the Pacific Fur Company. Most of the early settlers were Canadian French voyageurs, coureurs de bois, and trappers, and the Scottish traders of the Hudson Bay and Northwest Fur companies. The permanent settlement by Americans began soon after 1830. A large proportion of the early immigrants were from Missouri. Oregon was organized as a territory in 1848 and in 1859 it became a state.

Oring-Nor, a lake of Tibet, on one of the streams of the Hoang-Ho.

Orinoco, o-re-nó'ko one of the principal rivers of South America, rises in several branches on the W slope of the Sierra Parima, on the Brazilian frontier winds successively W, N and E, through the centre of Venezuela, and enters the Atlantic by numerous mouths, in lat 8°

26-14° N. Total course estimated at 1500 miles, of which about 900 miles below the cataract of Atures and 600 miles above the Maypures rapids are continuously navigable.
Area of basin, about 554,000 sq. m. The principal affluents in descending order are from the left the united stream of the Atabapo and Guaviare, the Meta, the Arauca, and the Apure. Some of these tributaries are larger than the Orinoco. Those from the right are the Ventuari, which joins the Orinoco about 40 miles E of the junction of the Atabapo, the Caura, and the Caroni. By the Casiquiare, which leaves the upper course of this stream a short distance below Kamaraldia, the Orinoco has a singular navigable communication with the Rio Negro and the Amazon.
At 200 leagues from the ocean its breadth is about 2 miles and near Ciudad Bolívar (formerly Angostura) to which place the tide reaches, it is 4 miles across.

The cataracts of Atures and Maypures (or Apures) the one in lat. 5° 8' N the other about 28 miles lower down consist of a countless number of little cascades succeeding one another like steps, where numerous islands and rocks so restrict the bed of the river that out of a breadth of 5000 feet there often remains an open channel only 20 feet in width. The waters of the Orinoco run from April to October, attaining their greatest height in July and August. The vast plains through which the river flows are at this season to a great extent overflowed. Both banks of the stream are densely wooded and, like the river itself full of animal life. The numerous channels by which the Orinoco finds its way to the sea begin to branch off from the main stream upward of 100 miles from the coast. The southernmost and widest of these branches runs almost directly E and reaches the ocean by the mouth called Bo-ca Navia (or Cajo Navia) between Point Barima on the S. and Cam Island on the N. which are more than 20 miles apart. In front of this mouth is a bar on which is 17 ft. of water. In the month of April, when the water is lowest, the tides are perceptible in the river at Ciudad Bolívar a distance of 225 miles from the sea. The other branches which run N and divide the delta of the Orinoco into numerous low islands, are imperfectly known. Despite its magnificent water-way the Orinoco is but little used in steamboat navigation. Large ocean steamers ascend to Ciudad Bolívar and minor steam-craft during the rainy season to the Apure.

Their names and dates of foundation are as follows: University College (1249) Balliol (about 1263) Merton (founded at Malden in Surrey in 1264 and transferred to Oxford 16 years later) Exeter (1314), Oriel (1326) Queen's (1340), New College (1379) Lincoln (1427) All Souls' (1437) Magdalen (1468) Brasenose (1509) Corpus Christi (1616) Christchurch (1534) Trinity (1554) St. John's (1555) Jesus (1571) Wadham (1613) Pembroke (1624) Worcester (1714) Hartford (1740) renovated 1874) Keble College (1870) and St. Edmund Hall (1296).

Besides the buildings of each individual college and hall, there are others of a splendid description, belonging to all in common, or to the university property as called. Of these the most remarkable are the Sheldonian Theatre, built by Sir Christopher Wren (1664-89) and so arranged as to accommodate nearly 4000 persons the buildings called the Schools, used for the examination of candidates for degrees the Bodleian Library originally established in 1445 and containing upward of 500 000 printed volumes and 30 000 manuscripts Ashmolean Museum, Radcliffe Library University Museum, Indian Museum Radcliffe Observatory the Clarendon (University press) and the Taylor Institution and University Galleries, a magnificent range of buildings, partly for the custody of works of art and partly devoted to the purposes of a foundation for the teaching of modern languages. In connection with the university may be mentioned the botanical garden. There are in Oxford, in partial affiliation with the university four halls for women, — Lady Margaret Hall (founded in 1879) St Hugh's Hall (1888) Somerville College (1879) and St. Hilda's Hall (1895) Oxford Divinity School dates from the fifteenth century although theological lectures were delivered as early as 1130 which may be recognized as being approximately the foundation of the university The University of Oxford, which in 1903 was attended by 3570 students sends 3 members to parliament, and the borough, as such 1 member Pop in 1901 48 338 Oxford plays a prominent rôle in the political annals of the Middle Ages. Pacific Ocean (formerly known as the Great South Sea often called in Fr. Mer du Sud, made du sud Ger. Südsee sūd sē, or Stilles Meer, still lē mair) the largest of the great divisions of water on the surface of the globe, extends from the Arctic to the Antarctic Circle, over 133 degrees of latitude, and from the W coast of America to Australia and the E coast of Asia, or through approximately 100 degrees of longitude. Area estimated at 80 000 000-70 000 000 sq m. In its widest part, at the equator (which divides it into a North and South Pacific), it is 11 000 miles across. The most distinguishing features of the Pacific are the countless number of comparatively small islands (mainly of coral and volcanic formation) which are spread over its surface, more especially over the equatorial region and the immense chain of mountains, with numerous active, dormant, and extinct volcanoes, which stretches almost continuously along either shore. In the S it is separated from the Antarctic Ocean only by an arbitrary line and many geographers prefer to designate that portion which lies S of lat. 40° S (as also in the case of the Atlantic Ocean) as belonging to a distinctly closed Southern Ocean. On the N it communicates with the Arctic Ocean through Bering Sea and the shallow Bering Strait, whose narrowest point, separating the continents of North America and Asia, is about 64 miles wide. Its coast-line on the American side, which is generally bold, is very little broken by inlets, the largest of these being the Gulf of California, Puget Sound and its associated waters, and Cook Inlet and Bristol Bay in Alaska. On the Asiatic side it is very irregular, the chief inlets are the China, Yellow Japan and Okhotsk seas. Among the more noted island-groups are the Philippines, Japan, the Koris, Aleutians, Ladrones, Carolines, Solomons, Marshall, New Hebrides, Fiji, Samoa, Tonga, Tahiti (Society) Low (or Tuamotu) Marquesas, Hawaii, Galápagos, and New Zealand, besides a vast multitude of solitary islands. The islands of the East Indian Archipelago (Borneo, Java, Sumatra, etc.) and the connecting comparatively shallow seas together with Papua and Australia, separate the Pacific basin from that of the Indian Ocean.

The average depth of the Pacific Ocean is thought to be 12 000-13,000 feet, perhaps not very different from that of the Atlantic. The greatest and most abrupt depths lie on the Asiatic side and in close proximity to island groups or chains such as the abysses of Guam (Ners Deep) in lat. 17° 40' N and lon. 144° 40' E with a depth of 31 614 ft. the greatest known depth of all oceans of Tonga and Kermadec (la lat. 30° 38' E., lon. 175° 30' W with a depth of 30 920 ft.) of the NE. of New Zealand and of the Tascara Deep, SE. of the Kurils and E of the main island of Japan with a depth of 37 925 ft. Zones of great depth also approach closely to the coasts of Peru, Chile, and Mexico. A belt of unusually deep water likewise borders the Aleutian Islands on the S. (34 225 ft. off the island of Attu). The greatest depth of the mid-Pacific is somewhat more than 30,000 ft.

Owing to the vast extent of the Pacific Ocean the general laws by which tides, winds, and currents are regulated suffer fewer modifications than in narrow seas. The tidal fluctuation is scarcely perceptible among the central islands. In the Low Archipelago, for example, and at Tahiti the rise is only 1 foot, and at the Hawaiian Islands 2 feet. It is only when by the proximity of a main land or by other similar causes the natural course of the wave is changed or obstructed in its progress are interposed that high tides are formed. In the Pacific however these never attain the maximum heights for which some parts of the Atlantic and Indian oceans are remarkable. Over nearly the whole of the W coast of America the rise is below 10 ft.

The prevailing winds of the Pacific like those of other great seas are divided into regular or trade winds and variable, the former blowing from the SE. on the S and from the NE. on the N side of the equator generally within the tropics, though sometimes extending as far as 20 degrees on either side of the equator. In the W and NW parts of the Pacific the influence of the monsoons of the Indian Ocean is strongly felt, and violent typhoons, for which the China Sea is noted, are not infrequent. In the E along the whole of the W coast of America, the winds differ greatly both in direction and character. Between Bering Sea and lat. 30° N the winds blow in all seasons, in every direction and so kind of regularity can be traced. From lat. 30° to 5° N the prevailing winds strongly resemble monsoons, blowing generally from November to April from the NW and NE, and from May to October from the S and SW and SE. The regions within the sphere of these winds are subject to violent storms and tornadoes. From lat. 8° N to 20° S the prevailing winds have the character of trade winds and from lat 20° S. to Cape Horn the north and south monsoons commence, often blowing with great violence, particularly from the S. As the Cape is approached, the prevailing winds become SW and NW and convert the whole tract within their sphere into a region of storms.

The currents of the Pacific correspond closely to those of the Atlantic Ocean. A strong Antarctic drift, which is frequently largely charged with icebergs, sets northward between Australia (or New Zealand) and Patagonia and is deflected on the South American side to form the northwardly trending Humboldt (or Peruvian) Current, which in its turn is deflected westward (between the equator and lat. 20° S) to form the South Equatorial Current. This moves westward across the entire width of the Pacific basin. A corresponding current in the northern basin is the North Equatorial Current, which forms a somewhat streamlike sweep between lat. 20° and 35° N giving origin to the warm-water Kuro-siwo (or Japanese) Current, the counterpart of the Atlantic Gulf Stream. An arm of this latter stream forces its way through Bering Strait into the Arctic basin. A cold Bering Sea current carries with it a lowering temperature to more southerly regions. Occupying a narrow space between the North and South Equatorial currents is the eastwardly trending equatorial counter-current. The average salinity of the Pacific Ocean is seemingly somewhat less than that of the Atlantic. For some of the general features of this ocean (as well as of other oceans) see ATLANTIC OCEAN.

The Pacific was seen by Europeans for the first time from its E shores in 1513 when Vasco Nufiez de Balboa, the Spanish governor of Darien crossed the isthmus of Panama and saw the boundless ocean spread out before him. It received its present name from the celebrated navigator Magellan, who sailed across it in 1520-21.

Palatinate (Ger. Pfalz, pfalz) the name of two small countries in the old German Empire—the Lower (Rheinish) Palatinate (Unterpfalz, Rheinhessen) and the Upper Palatinate (Oberpfalz)—which were politically connected down to 1820. The territories which constituted the Lower Pa-intimate (the Palatinato proper) are now included in Bavaria, Baden, Hesse, and Prussia. Only about half of the present government district of the Palatinato (Rhenish Palatinato) in Bavaria belonged to the old Elector Palatine. Their principal domain, the Electoral Palatinato, extended on both banks of the Rhine far beyond the limits of the present Palatinato, and included the towns of Heidelberg (the seat of the Elector Palatine) and Mannheim. The next most important territory of the Lower Palatinato was the duchy of Zweibrücken (Deux-Postes). The Upper Palatinato forms part of the present government district of the same name in Bavaria. The capital was Amberg. The name pfalz, from the Latin palatium (palace) was the designation in early medieval times of the imperial castles which existed in various parts of Germany. The Counts Palatine (i. e. Counts of the Palaces) of the Rhine, whose original seat was at Aix-la-Chapelle, figure as hereditary princes as far back as the eleventh century. They gradually rose to be among the foremost of the German princes. From 1316 the Palatinato was under the rule of the House of Wittelsbach. The Golden Bull of 1356 designated the Count Palatine as one of the seven imperial electors who had the right to choose the head of the Holy Roman Empire. Shortly before this a new domain which came to be known as the Upper Palatinato, had been added to the hereditary dominions of the Palatinato. In 1386 the Elector Palatine founded the university of Heidelberg. As a result of the events of the first period of the Thirty Years War the Upper Palatinato passed into the possession of Bavaria (1623). The extinction of the Wittelsbach dynasty in the electorate of Bavaria in 1777 placed the Rhenish Palatine upon the throne of that country. The Rhenish Palatinato was dismembered in the course of the war which followed the French Revolution. The two principal states, Heidelberg and Mannheim passed to Baden.

Palatinato, or Rhenish Palatinato, formerly also known as Rhenish Hesse, a region of Germany constituting a government district in the kingdom of Bavaria, lying between Baden on the E. and Rhenish Prussia on the W. and between Hesse and Rhenish Prussia on the N. and Alsace-Lorraine on the S. Area, 2288 sq. m. Pop. in 1900 831,478. The Rhine forms the N. boundary. Parallel with the river about 20 miles to the W. extends the range of the Harz, a northern prolongation of the Vosges with elevations slightly exceeding 2000 feet. The Palatinato is a charming region with its fertile fields and orchards, its vine-clad hills, and its wooded mountains. Its wine is noted. Capital, Speyer, the largest town. Ludwigshafen. The majority of the inhabitants are Protestants. The boundaries of this district do not correspond to those of the old Palatinato.

Palatinato, Upper (Oder Oberpfalz) a government district in the E. part of Bavaria, bordering on Bohemia. Area, 3,28 sq. m. Pop. in 1900 353,941. It is a mountainous and hilly region. In the E. is the Bohemian forest. In the N. and S. respectively it is traversed by the offshoots of the Fichtelgebirge and the Bavarian Forest. On the W. border is the Franconian Jura.
